THE REDEMPTION LAW OF 1895.

A correspondent in the Oregonian of the 4th inst. calls attention to the fact that the new redemption law, as construed by the supreme court, may prove a curse, instead of a benefit, to the debtor class. The law was enacted in response to a popular demand for some measure which would alleviate the condition of mortgagors. Prior to the session of 1895 the owner of real property which was sold on execution, might redeem the same at any time within four months after confirmation by the court of the sale; the law of 1895 extended this time for redemption to one year.

The constitution of the United States forbids every state from passing any law which would impair the obligation of contracts. The question was recently presented to the Oregon supreme court in a case in which the plaintiff claimed that the law in force when his contract was made, giving four months' time for redemption, was a part of his contract, and by extending the time for redemption the value of his security was reduced, and therefore the law of 1895 impaired the contract. The supreme court held otherwise, and declared the law valid as to all mortgages, whether executed before or after the law of 1895 went into effect.

The Oregonian's correspondent calls attention to the fact that this being a federal question, the decisions of the United States supreme court will govern. He cites several cases of that court which uphold the plaintiff's contention in the Oregon case referred to. It is true that the supreme court of the United States has held directly opposite to the supreme court of Oregon, those who rely upon the Oregon decision and allow more than four months to elapse before redeeming, may be left out entirely when the federal courts decide that his time for redemption expired at the end of four months.

The contention of the plaintiff in the Oregon case recently decided, is supported by the leading text writers on constitutional law, and it looks as if the suggestion of the Oregonian correspondent that our supreme court has erred, and possibly to the great injury of some one, who may rely upon its decision, is apt.

General Harrison has the wisdom and courage to say "No" to his many friends, and there will be no more talk about his nomination. The people of the nation respect him more than ever, and more than ever feel that he would be a most desirable president. With General Harrison out of the race, the West will no doubt rally about Mr. McKinley. There is today no more able, honest, sensible, and in all respects American, than Mr. McKinley, and his nomination will insure Republican success and a return to true American principles in the administration. The other aspirants are good, but McKinley is the best.

It is stated that the United States treasury has 350,000,000 ounces of silver stored in its vaults and yet it is borrowing money to meet running expenses. What is the matter with selling this stuff which our senators from Nevada, Montana, Utah, Idaho, and one-half our senators from Oregon admire so much? If any one of our three banks in this city were compelled to borrow gold to keep running, and yet had a proportionate amount of that silver bullion stored in its vaults, they would be regarded as poor financiers and unfit to run a bank. Perhaps Mr. Carlisle has overlooked this way out of the hole he is in.

Dr. Wallace has resigned and is going to Chicago. His experience in Oregon mining speculation has fitted him for Chicago life. He will there have a wider field for service and a larger salary. He will no doubt avoid in the future quarrels with the family of his broker, and thereby lessen his usefulness in his new field. In the meantime Oregon will have to become degenerate.

Wealth does not always shield the guilty. Dr. Ducrestow, a St. Louis millionaire, has just been convicted of murder in the first degree for killing his wife and child. It requires more than money to fool an ordinary jury or sway the ordinary judge.
