MR. MITCHELL TO THE RESCUE.

The gratifying intelligence came yesterday that Senator Mitchell had conferred with the war department regarding the amount needed to complete the Cascade locks, or make them ready for operation, and would introduce an emergency measure, adding this amount to the general appropriation bill. This action of Senator Mitchell is decidedly opportune, and no part of his official career will be followed with closer interest than his efforts toward securing the appropriation deemed necessary before the locks can be operated.

That the present occasion should not have arisen, is generally conceded. The engineers have been working on the plans for years and had ample time to consider every detail incident to a work even of this magnitude. No one connected with the locks has ever been hurried and the fact that such an egregious blunder has been made cannot well be explained upon the hypothesis of poor intent.

The people of Eastern Oregon have been put "in a hole" from which Senator Mitchell is making efforts to extricate them. If he succeed no act he could perform would have more effect in entitling him to the gratitude and support of this section. Mr. Mitchell has been credited with possessing influence equal to any member of the senate, and with knowing how to secure the passage of a measure when he desires it. He never had a better opportunity to show his worth than at this juncture, when the eyes of the people are turned upon him. If this emergency measure pass, it would be well if some means could be adopted to secure the wise use of the money and a guarantee given that this appropriation would finish the work, and the men in charge not have the opportunity of saying again "The locks cannot be operated till we get more money."

WHERE POLITICIANS THRIVE.

The people of Portland cannot complain of uninteresting politics. The developments of the past few days have strengthened the belief, generally held, that the coming local campaign will be one of the very warmest ever held in Multnomah county. The Oregonian of yesterday comes out in a double-leaded article, stating that it is time for the people to understand what is going on, and seek measures to down the friends of Senator Mitchell, whom the Oregonian declares are using that gentleman's name as a mantle to hide their own self-seeking.

Multnomah county is suffering from too much politics. The interests of the taxpayers are made of less account than the ambitions of the men who make politics a trade; but the course of the Oregonian will have little or no effect in bettering the situation. To sing Joe Simon's praises, while running down his enemies, has too much the sound of self-interest to be commendable to intelligent voters. One trouble with Portland is that it has been bossed too long by Joe Simon and the crowd whose idol he is. Politics have reached such a low ebb that any change will be for the better. An attempt to cry down the men who are fighting Simon because of that reason, cannot hope for success. A new deal is needed all around, and Simon, as well as the obnoxious men in the other camp, should be relegated to the background and the people given a chance. The entrance into politics of every high-minded and honest citizen would soon break the rule of the bosses.

It seems almost incredible that the vast sums which have been appropriated for the construction of the locks have been so spent that the appropriation is exhausted and the work unfinished. If the government engineers and the brace of contractors had treated the people with the same fairness that congress has, boats would now be passing through the canal. If the men who are running the thing, or rather failing to run it, could be deposed for a time, enough money and men could be gathered to go down and plaster those unprotected sides with rocks so that the banks wouldn't wash away. It would be most unfortunate if the government engineers who have been at the locks from time to time, would lose their positions, for it is doubtful if they could get employment elsewhere when it was known that they drew plans which, when the work was done according to the specifications, had made it so that the canal could not be operated.

The senatorial situation in Kentucky has become critical, and probably today or tomorrow will see someone selected. Although the step is not one which can always be taken with commendation, yet if the election of a Republican proves impossible, rather than see a deadlock and the state but half represented, or a Populist chosen, we hope the sound money men in both parties will unite upon Carlisle. If a Democrat must go, no man within that party can be chosen who will suit the country better than Carlisle. Besides, he will soon be out of a job, and after the next election the Republican majority in the senate will be so large that Carlisle's vote for free trade will avail nothing.

The Klickitat Republican comes out in favor of Levi Morton for the presidency. It remains to be proven what particular superiority Morton possesses over the other gentlemen who are seeking this honor. He would make a better president undoubtedly than any Democrat that could be named because he believes in the restoration of a wise protective policy and the maintenance of a strong financial system, but there are other Republican leaders whose services entitle them to this recognition far more than Morton's. We hope our neighboring paper will not raise its hopes too high, as they are doomed to a certain disappointment.
