A VOICE FROM THE PAST.

All the Democratic editorials written between now and next November cannot convince the American people that the enactment of a protective policy, similar in purpose, if not degree, to that which bears the name of McKinley, is not the need of the hour. The past three years have produced facts more eloquent than all the arguments of Democratic orators, to whom the task of excusing their party's policy is a difficult one.

The United States, after passing through a fearful conflict, when its resources were drained to their utmost, saw the period of its greatest prosperity from 1865 to 1892. During those years the increase of wealth in this country was greater by many millions than the combined wealth of Great Britain. Under the beneficent workings of a protective system this country was able to repair the damages the civil war had caused, to gather its shattered finances and place them upon a basis that made the country's credit unquestioned throughout the world. The industries that had been stopped because of the war were revived; avenues of employment opened for labor, and the country began a new era of development, which closed with the election of 1892.

The disastrous results which followed that event are too painfully impressed upon the people to need emphasis. The greatest financial panic, with consequent stagnation of business, the country had ever experienced followed Cleveland's election. The commercial life of the country reached such a low ebb that improvement or collapse must come, and with the prospect of Republican success in '96 times have taken a turn for the better, though, after all, the improvement is slight.

In view of the knowledge which the American people have learned since 1892, it is interesting to note the views of Abraham Lincoln, expressed in 1843, upon this same question. His remarks at that time showed how clearly he read the future. At a Whig meeting in Springfield Mr. Lincoln was appointed to prepare an "Address to the People of the State," and commenting upon his work, he said:

The first of our resolutions declares a tariff of duties upon foreign importations, producing sufficient revenues for the support of the general government, and so adjusted as to protect American industry, to be indispensably necessary to the prosperity of the American people; and the second declares direct taxation for a national revenue to be improper.

For several years past the revenues of the government have been unequal to its expenditures, and consequently loan after loan, sometimes direct and sometimes indirect in form, has been resorted to. By this means a new national debt has been created, and is still growing on us with a rapidity fearful to contemplate—a rapidly only to be reasonably expected in time of war. This state of things has been produced by a prevailing unwillingness either to increase the tariff or to resort to direct taxation. But the one or the other must come. Coming expenditures must be met, and the present debt must be paid; and money cannot always be borrowed for these objects. The system of loans is but temporary in its nature, and must soon explode. It is a system not only ruinous while it lasts, but one that must soon fail and leave us destitute. As an individual who undertakes to live by borrowing soon finds his original means devoured by interest, and next, no one left to borrow from, so it must be with the government.

The words of Lincoln aptly describe the situation today. The government has borrowed millions of dollars during the present administration, and the end is not yet. The country is pursuing a ruinous policy, which, if unchecked, can lead but to bankruptcy.

The people will have an opportunity next November to repent of their mistake four years ago, and the words of Lincoln are a solemn admonition as to how they should act.

There can be no question but that the people of Ohio are in earnest about McKinley's candidacy. The enthusiasm his name occasioned during the state convention showed how strong is his hold both upon the people and the politicians. But it isn't always the man for whom the most noise is made that wins the race, as the repeated defeats of James G. Blaine declare. The McKinley boom is in good condition, but his friends should take care it is not worked too assiduously. It may wear itself out before the convention next June.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address:
