GOV. MORTON'S WEAKNESS.

The candidacy of Levi P. Morton, while it is being pressed with vigor, does not elicit the enthusiasm throughout the country that rightly is due to a man whose record has been as good as that of the New York governor. The element that is lacking in the Morton campaign is sincerity. To the unprejudiced it looks as if Morton were being used as a means to an end. What that end may be is known only to the coterie of politicians who are creating the Morton boom. The New York Tribune, the most influential Republican paper in the country, and one which is kept free from the control of any faction, makes the following very fair expressions regarding Morton's candidacy:

"In the echoes that come back to us from the western and southwestern states of what may be called the Morton boom there seems to be a distinct misunderstanding of Governor Morton's candidacy. The prevailing apprehension that Governor Morton represents merely a boodle candidacy is entirely wrong. That a reasonable basis has not been prepared for it in the uncommon exertions made by active and influential persons, such as Mr. Anderson and Mr. Simms and Mr. Thomas T. Fortune and ex-Postmaster Van Cott, we are not prepared to deny. But these gentlemen have been carrying on a canvass for which they themselves are alone responsible. We do not permit ourselves to believe that Governor Morton himself has advanced a dollar to pay either the ordinary expenses of these gentlemen in going through the West and Southwest presenting his claims to the presidential nomination or the extraordinary expenses which are generally understood to be incurred in that sort of canvass. We prefer to believe that whatever has been done in that regard has been without consultation with him and through the overzeal of persons who are for one reason and another active in his behalf. The fact remains, however, that most of the activity in his behalf has appeared to be due to the interest of politicians, who, under the appearance of loyalty and devotion to him, have concealed ulterior personal purposes in their own behalf.

"And it is this prevalent impression that has done more than anything else to let what might be called the Morton boom drop down to the general level of all the booms for 'favorite sons.' The resolution passed by an unanimous vote of the last state convention, which named Governor Morton as the candidate of the Republican party of the state of New York for president of the United States, undoubtedly expressed the general sense of the Republican party of the state. With some considerable exceptions in the matter of his appointments, due rather to his amiability of disposition than to his desire to further personal ambition, he had made for at least one year a generally satisfactory administration. He had in several instances helped the cause of a good government and municipal reform in a way all his own, but in such a way as was generally appreciated, and which made all honest Republicans friendly to the promotion of his ambition, if such it was. Since then several things have happened. Not least was the somewhat famous dinner given by Mr. Depew, at which ex-Senator Warner Miller, ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt, ex-Senator Frank Hiscock and others were present, where it was agreed to urge upon Governor Morton his acceptance of the candidacy which had already been formally put forth by the state convention. There had been up to that time more or less doubt as to Governor Morton's willingness to be a candidate. It has been generally understood since that time that the urgency of these gentlemen overcome his reluctance, and that he has been from that date a willing candidate. But only a willing candidate. Not by any means a candidate who seeks the great office in question by such means as has been intimated in the reports that come to us from the western and southwestern states.

"In the general canvass now in progress Governor Morton's relation to the event ought not to be misunderstood. He is the candidate of a majority of New York state Republicans because of certain things he has done in the advancement of a cause which they believe in. He is not a candidate of a great many New York state Republicans because he has not been great enough to rise above faction and be the governor as well as the presidential candidate of a whole party. That is all that ails Governor Morton and his boom. It is all that made necessary Mr. Depew's utterance on Sunday. It is all that disturbs the process of events that might make him the unanimous choice of the New York delegation at St. Louis. It is the weakness of amiability. And it is fatal."
