"CYCLONE" DAVIS AND THOMAS JEFFERSON.

"Cyclone Davis" was introduced on the occasion of his address here as the greatest campaign orator in the United States. He began his address by declaring that his only text book as the Constitution and his only counselor is Thos. Jefferson, and for effect he caused to be piled upon the table nine or ten volumes, which he said were the writings of Thos. Jefferson, from which he quoted, or pertended to quote. Thomas Jefferson being one of the patron saints of all good Democrats, his frequent reference to Jefferson is a winning card, so far as Democrats with Populist tendencies are concerned. Jefferson was unquestionably a good man. History has accredited to him much, and, from the standpoint of every Republican, quite all that he was or is entitled to. But he, like the "Texas Cyclone," and all other southern Democrats, was of the class of men who believed, or maintained, that the union was a general government constituted for special purposes only; a compact of states, and that the component states should be the final judges of the extent of the powers delegated to the general government. In other words, Jefferson and Madison, in the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions of 1798, concerning the Alien and Sedition law, of which they were the respective authors, were the first promulgators of the doctrine of nullification and secession. Some political writers have given Calhoun the honor (?) of first advocating this doctrine in which "our recent unpleasantness" had its origin; but reference to the resolutions above referred to clearly demonstrates the error of such writers.

Davis, who was a southern Democrat until five years ago, comes, backed up, as he claims, by the father of secession, to teach the people of Oregon how to vote. If Jefferson was the author of all the ideas this Populist agitator accredits to him, he was as far from truth and patriotism as when he wrote the Kentucky resolutions.

As to the banking system, against which Jefferson is said to have written and spoken, it was in its nature essentially what the Republican party today is opposing, viz, a system of inflation. The Populist is demanding more currency inflation—the very thing which Jefferson opposed, and concerning which he used the language which this ex-secessionist says he used as to the whole banking system.

Davis' speech hardly merits so much attention, for it contained no argument. It was a harangue against capital, and banks in particular—an appeal to the prejudices of men who are not advised as to history or finance. It was this and nothing more.

In the fall of 1893 a son of Mr. T. A. McFarland, a prominent merchant of Live Oak, Sutter county, Calif., was taken with a very heavy cold. The pains in his chest were so severe that he had spasms and was threatened with pneumonia. His father gave him several large doses of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which broke up the cough and cured him. Mr. McFarland says whenever his children have croup he invariably gives them Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and it always cures them. He considers it the best cough remedy in the market. For sale by Blakeley & Houghton's Drug store.
