NEEDED LEGISLATION.

The legislature of Oregon at its session next winter will be called upon to enact much needed legislation. The failure of the preceding legislature to do anything but wrangle over the election of a senator and pass appropriation bills, has left to its successor work in addition to what naturally would belong to it. The abolishment of useless, money-wasting commissions will be among the first duties of the session; but of equal importance, and more so from the standpoint of patriotism, is the necessity of passing a registry law, which will complete the usefulness of the Australian ballot system and raise our elections to a plane of greater purity, making them the expression of the wish of an intelligent people.

The enactment of the Australian system was a great advance in the direction of good government. Intelligence is a necessary element in the process of voting, which was far from being the case under the old procedure. Men who have dabbled in politics of the grosser sort have seen the effects of this law in making the vote of the ignorant uncertain, and thus lessening the amount of money illegitimately spent at general elections. Political ingenuity has, however, so disciplined by organization the ignorant voting class that the influence of the politician has to a greater or less extent been made to extend to the voting booth. Especially is this so when, through the lack of a registration law, voters can be imported from outside places and more than that, can be made to vote several times at the same election by appearing in different wards. A law which would compel all voters to be registered ten days or two weeks before election, would in a measure put an end to the iniquitous practice of trading in votes.

This subject has already received some agitation through the press of the state, and the sentiment is strongly expressed in favor of such legislation. The CHRONICLE hastens to join in the demand for a registry law, and feels safe in saying that the members of the legislature from Wasco county will be found working to such an end.

NOW THEY SELL WOOL.

Here is the testimony which the East Oregonian proffers as to the successful results of the venture which brought the wool scouring mill to Pendleton. We wish we could say the same words for The Dalles:

Pendleton is the only point in the state where any wool has been sold so far this year. It seems that the East Oregonian was right when it declared the wool scouring mills to be most important to Pendleton and made the fight to secure them in the face of the strongest kind of opposition. Now those who opposed the mills are reaping the benefits along with others who favored them, and all is well. Earnest, aggressive opposition is never to be deplored in anything.

An argument in favor of less frequent elections is found in the cost of holding national conventions. It is estimated that the St. Louis and Chicago meetings will cost in round numbers $8,000,000. This would go a long ways towards the interest on the Cleveland bonds. On the other hand the spending of so large an amount by people who presumably are able to pay is of benefit in giving employment to thousands of men and in putting into circulation capital that might otherwise be dormant.

Artesian Water in Klickitat.

It has been proven beyond a doubt that artesian water can be had in Klickitat by going to a nominal depth, Messrs. Taplin & Phillips have just finished the boring of a well for Mr. R. G. Ferguson, who resides about nine miles east of town. At the depth of about sixty feet an excellent stream of water was encountered. While it does not come out with great force, there is a continual flow from the well. It is evident from this that artesian water can be had in this vicinity by going to the proper depth.—Sentinel.
