A DANGEROUS EXPERIMENT.

A correspondent under the nom de plume of "Truth seeker" addresses THE CHRONICLE as follows: "You speak of free silver coinage as 'an experiment.' I have always been under the impression that silver was coined free until 1873 and was a decided success, but was demonetized without the knowledge or consent of the American people by an act which is sometimes spoken of as 'the crime of '73.' I have also been taught to believe that the silver dollar was the original unit of value by which the gold dollar was measured."

To put in practical operation the scheme proposed by the free coinage advocates would be trying a decided experiment. Never in the history of the country has an attempt been made to coin silver and gold at other ratios than their commercial values. The ratios which at various times have been adopted have all been based on the relative commercial values of the two metals, and were possible only because the fluctuation in value in the early history of the country was not nearly so great as it is now. The free silver men wish to coin silver at the fixed ratio of 16 to 1, ignoring altogether the relative commercial values which the two metals possess. This would be an experiment, and a most dangerous one at that.

Silver was never coined free to any extent up to 1873, as the total amount of silver dollars coined up to that date was only $8,000,000. Various coins were used as money, those of many foreign nations being allowed to pass as mediums of exchange. Since 1873 an amount of silver has been coined many times as great as that coined prior to that date.

It is but idle talk to refer to the act of 1873 as a "great crime." It is no more of a crime than the act restoring equitable duties upon tariff imports under the McKinley administration will be. For three years preceding its passage the provisions of the act were discussed in congress and in the press. Its purport was made known and those who voted for it did so with a full knowledge of their action. The crime of '73 is but a myth, a bugbear used to frighten unthinking people.

Whether or not the silver dollar was the unit of value a hundred years ago, has nothing to do with whether or not it should occupy such a position today. Times are changed with the flight of years, and what might suffice at one time will not do so fifty years later. But the silver dollar was not intended to be the unit of value by our forefathers. They endeavored to secure a unit from the relation of the two metals based upon their commercial values. The attempt was not a success, and the experience of years showed that gold was the better standard. And so gold has come to be the recognized standard of value in all civilized countries.

The excellent editorial in today's Oregonian, and one of like merit in yesterday's Telegram, discusses almost these same points.

The Democratic convention now meeting in Chicago will have a place in history. For bitterness of feeling and expression it is unequalled in recent years. Men are wrangling for an opportunity to lead a broken party to utter defeat next November.

None But Ayer's at the World's Fair.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla enjoys the extraordinary distinction of having been the only blood purifier allowed on exhibit at the world's fair, Chicago. Manufacturers of other sarsaparillas sought by every means to obtain a showing of their goods, but they were all turned away under the application of the rule forbidding the entry of patent medicines and nostrums. The decision of the world's fair authorities in favor of Ayer's Sarsaparilla was in effect as follows: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla is not a patent medicine. It does not belong to the list of nostrums. It is here on its merits."
