WAYSIDE GLEANINGS.

Random Observations and Local Events of Lesser Magnitude.

Honeymoon gum is the latest delicacy to be obtained at Keller's bakery. Try it.

The Regulator took down a transfer wagon this morning, to be used by the company at the Cascades.

The funeral of Frances Catharine Krefl takes place from the family residence at 2 p. m. tomorrow.

All members of the A. O. U. W. are requested to attend lodge tonight at 8 o'clock. By order Master Workman.

Three marriage licenses were issued by the county clerk today, Richard A. Simley and Mrs. Nancy E. Howes, Geo. A. Lindsay and Lillie M. Templeton, and Barry Stennet and Minervia A. Abbott.

The discussion at the institute this afternoon was concerning the school law, what constituted legal voter, etc. The interesting discovery was made that a law can be enforced even if it is unconstitutional, until it is passed upon by the supreme court.

Robt. Mays received by the Regulator last night the shipment of a thoroughbred Short Horn bull from Alexander Chalmers, a prominent fine stock breeder of Washington county. The animal goes to Mr. Mays' Tygh Valley farm, where he keeps a nice herd of pure bred Short Horn cows.

Ex-Gov. Z. F. Moody has just returned from the Des Chutes with a stalk of sweet corn over eight feet in length. This seems like a remarkable growth, but Mr. Moody has the corn to show. The fact need not be surprising. In this section of country all kinds of cereals as well as fruit and vegetables, grow to perfection.

Attorney E. B. Dufur has just returned from Wamic, where he was called to defend a party named N. W. Little, who was accused by one Spencer of grand larceny by bailer. The result of the trial proved that it was merely a dispute as to the rights of property. Little was holding a trunk and contents from money due him from Spencer, and the investigation showed that he was absolutely free from the taint of criminal intent.

Encouraging Crop Reports.

Attorney E. B. Dufur, who returned last night from Wamic, gives the most encouraging reports thus far received of the season's grain crop. James Pattison, who has finished threshing from nine acres of ground about a mile from Wamic, finds that he has 380 bushels of wheat from it, or an average of 40 bushels to the acre. This is fall grain, but the whole valley will yield a much larger crop than has been generally conceded. From his observations taken from the buggy it seemed as though all the grain-fields were in a thriving condition. He saw no grasshoppers, and the fields have not been injured by drouth or hot winds. Tygh grade, a stretch of two miles, is filled with loose rocks, which should be picked off the road, and Mr. Dufur believes that it would be a good investment for the county to hire two men for two days with rakes to clear the grade of these rocks.

JUDGE MAYS' FIRST CASE.

He Surprised Lawyers and Citizens by His Unstudied Eloquence.

When Robert Mays, one of Wasco county's first citizens, was elected county judge the people felt they had made a wise choice, but they did not know they had voted into office a man who possessed the ability to make a speech which would rival in eloquence the efforts of our most popular advocates.

This morning John H. Hall, of Portland, appeared before the county court in a habeas corpus proceeding, wherein he asked for the discharge of Roy Turner, who was charged with perjury, having sworn falsely regarding some coyote scalps. Mr. Hall stated that the young man was the son of estimable parents and if discharged for this offense would leave the county and be put in circumstances where he would lead a better life. He also raised a point of law wherein Deputy Prosecuting Attorney Phelps coincided and which seemed to Judge Mays, acting in the absence of Judge Bradshaw, to be well raised. As a result the youthful offender was discharged.

Mr. Hall and Mr. Phelps had requested of Judge Mays that he deliver a charge to the young man, impressing upon him the obligation to carry himself as a young man should. And this Mr. Mays did. In the court room were gathered a number of people who were eager listeners to the words which fell from the gray-haired judge's lips. He spoke some words to that young man which it would be well if every youth could hear. In eloquent language he pointed out the results which come from bad companionship, and urged him to hearken to his mother's exhortations and lead a life of honesty.

When Mr. Mays had finished, Mr. Hall said he had listened to speeches from Judge Shattuck and other jurists, but he was free to say that never had he heard words of advice so eloquently given as those uttered by Judge Mays, and THE CHRONICLE reporter wants to record that when the list of orators in The Dalles is summed up that among the first should be numbered Robert Mays, and if this is not believed ask Mr. Hall, Clerk Kelsay, Deputy Sheriff Kelly or Deputy Attorney Phelps.

DIED.

Thursday morning, Arthur Wilhelm, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. U. G. Pearson, aged 6 months, of capillary bronchitis. Funeral at 10 a. m. tomorrow from the house.

RODE TO HER DEATH.

Frances Krefl the Victim of a Runaway Accident.

A shocking and deplorable accident the loved daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul last evening deprived Frances Krefl, Krefl, of her life. Just before reaching the stage of womanhood, a vivacious and intelligent girl of 15 is called from the school room to sever the ties of family life and the bonds of friendship and enter that mysterious bourne from whence no traveler returns.

Frances Krefl was driving about dusk last evening with a younger sister and a child in arms. The sister was holding the child and Frances had the reins. They had crossed the Ninth street bridge driving away from town when she dropped the right hand rein. They were passed by Miss Rose Michell and Mr. Williams to the right. He also noticed that Frances had lost control of the right hand rein, and looking back, saw the cart tip over, throwing out its occupants. He turned his own rig and proceeded to the disaster, though not at the time realizing its fearful import. The younger girl and child were thrown out and found to be unhurt, but nothing was to be seen of Frances Krefl. Farther down the road was a cloud of dust made by a swiftly moving horse, but neither the cart nor its occupant could be observed with distinctness. Mr. Williams gave instant pursuit, but when next he saw the poor girl whom he had passed so short a time before, in the full enjoyment of life, she was dead. The overturning cart had caught her in some way, securely fastening her to it. She was not dragged along the ground, but was caught in the gearing in such a manner that one side of her face was pressed against the wheel. Its many revolutions had worn away that side of her face next to it, even to the interior of her head. A shoe was also torn from her foot.

The runaway was stopped by Mr. Y. Marsh, just this side of the Chenoweth creek bridge, the vehicle having been dragged from the corner of the Mission gardens, a distance of about two miles. When released by him from her position she was quite dead.

The sad news was broken as gently as possible to the distracted parents. Mr. Krefl was hurrying with heavy heart along the road to the scene of his child's death, having been notified by the children. Mrs. Krefl was attending a lodge of which she is a member. The friends of the family did everything in their power to allay the fearful sadness of the parents, to watch with the dead and comfort the living.

Miss Frances Krefl was universally esteemed by all who knew her. She attended the public school, and a flag has been floating at half mast over the school building since early morning. The accident was one of those deplorable affairs which can neither be foreseen nor avoided. No blame can be attached to anyone, and the fatality was purely misfortune. The sympathy of the entire community is extended to the grief-stricken family.

A Battle of Buttons.

It would seem from appearances as though this were to be a campaign of buttons, from the numerous designs already out, notwithstanding the determination of the Republican managers to make it a campaign of education. The silver idea gives rise to much originality, and some very handsome buttons, of queer design. The McKinley buttons have little or no reference to the one idea of the finances, and most of them are portraits of McKinley or McKinley and Hobart together. Nearly all are adorned with the United States flag. A description of those in stock at the present time follows:

A silk badge, costing $1, is the most expensive and elaborate. The bar contains the words McKinley & Hobart on a "gold" surface. Just below are two flags in relief. Following this are admirably executed photographs of McKinley and Hobart, and below this the words: Protection, Reciprocity and Sound Money. A gold fringe completes the badge.

Another badge for 75 cents is very handsome, and contains the photographs and words: "Prosperity's advance agents."

There are a dozen different kinds of buttons, some with one face, some with two, some with flags, some without and a very few with mottoes. One contains the picture of an elephant, over it the words "grand old party," and underneath "good as gold."

The silver buttons contain no photographs. A plain white button has the words, "Don't mention gold here."

A silver button has the words, "No gold bugs wanted here."

A button half gold, half silver has the mere figures 16 on the silver side and 1 on the gold side.

Another has the picture of a bee, on one side "16" and on the other "to 1," and underneath "no compromise."
