Slight Eruption of Mt. Hood.

The Hood River Glacier best tells the story of the eruption of Mt. Hood on Wednesday of last week. William Killingsworth and party, consisting of twenty-one persons, had made a successful ascent and were on their way down and had reached a crevasse some 400 feet below the summit. This crevasse is of unknown depth for the greater part of its length, but was nearly filled at the place where the party crossed it. When about half the party had crossed a rumbling sound, resembling the roar of distant thunder or artillery, was heard. The next instant the mountain trembled, and on looking up, smoke and steam were seen issuing from a towering cliff directly above them. The air seemed to be filled with flying rocks, and an avalanche of boulders came tearing down the mountain side directly toward the point where the helpless little knot of mountain climbers were standing. There was no time to think, no way of escape, and no power on earth could stop the downward flight of the leaping boulders. In an instant almost the stream of boulders was upon them. One of the largest struck near Miss Fay Killingsworth. She was lifted some fifteen feet into the air, her body being twisted into a circle, so that her hands and feet touched, and then thrown into a crevasse some ten feet deep, where she was picked up unconscious. The boulder cleared this crevasse and then continued down the mountain side.

The guide who accompanied the party at once went to the young lady's rescue. Upon getting down into the crevasse he saw only a piece of the girl's dress. By dint of hard work, however, he soon had the body uncovered and managed to get her out. Her face and hands were bruised and bleeding and she was unconscious. A small flask of brandy was the only restorative at hand, and this was applied with the desired result. She had to be carried down the mountain, and then Dr. Raffety was summoned by telephone from Portland, as it was feared she was seriously and perhaps fatally injured. But no bones were broken. Her bruises were bad, however, and it will take some time to recover from the shock. Several others in the party were also struck by rocks, but none of them were seriously injured.

The eruption lasted but a few minutes. After the rocks and ashes that were thrown up had fallen and the boulders reached their destination at the foot of the mountain, all was serene again.

Coming.
In a letter received by the undersigned from W. S. Geary, he says: "I have not seen Ackroid for nearly 2 years. He or anyone else stories if they say I told them I should not make The Dalles any more." I further desire to say, as I know W. S. Geary as a tried man and thorough mechanic and piano tuner, he shall have all work of the Jacobsen Book & Music Co., who will not employ every tuner or believe the little stories they sometimes tell to obtain work.
