NOT AN IDLE THREAT.

Our Popocratic cotemporary refers to the statement of a prominent sheepman of this county, recently made, that he will raise no sheep next year if Bryan is elected, as an "idle threat," and proceeds to inquire: "If capital is drawn out of active employment by the election of Bryan, where will it go? Will it seek investment in other countries where profits are less, or will it be locked up in safe deposits for the next four years, there to lie idle and earn its owner nothing?"

This question has been frequently presented, but we have not before known as intelligent an authority as the Mountaineer to consider it worth asking. Bryan asks it over and over again, but he does it to fool people who give the subject no thought.

The particular capital of our particular sheepman will not go out of the country, unless perchance all or a portion of the capital he has been using belongs to someone in Europe, as is the case with some of the capital used in Wasco county by sheepmen. If it is owned in Europe, it will be recalled and will not again be employed here to give employment to labor. If he owns all the capital invested, not the usual case with men engaged in any large industry, this particular capital will not go out of the country nor lie idle; but may be used elsewhere to fill the place of other capital, which will certainly go out of the country. There is today a considerable amount of capital used in Wasco county which is owned in Europe, not by corporations or banks, but by individuals. This will certainly be called home. The Oregon Mortgage Company, the Northern Counties Investment Trust, and perhaps a dozen other money lending corporations, also have money loaned in this and adjoining counties. These loans will be withdrawn as soon as practicable. The withdrawal of this and other capital—for the same condition exists in all the states west of the Mississippi—will cause a scarcity of money with which to carry on the business in which it was invested; the rates of interest will increase, and the capital now used in Wasco county by this sheepman will find employment elsewhere, or in some other line of business which can pay a rate of interest higher than the profits of sheep raising.

But, says the Bryan man, the borrower of this foreign capital can borrow the silver that is to be coined. The silver is not now coined, and enough to fill the place of this foreign capital could not be in time to aid this industry. The rate of interest will not fall, but is more likely to rise; silver will be depreciated, as most men, even among the silverites, admit, and a man will have to pay ten per cent for money less valuable than the gold he is now using. Neither farming nor sheep raising will warrant it.

The result, as we view it, will be a contraction in business; a lessening of business enterprises, and consequently a diminution in demand for labor.

Every principle that Republicans have worked and fought for since the issue of slavery was disposed of, finds an opponent in Wm. J. Bryan. He seeks to conceal this opposition under a new issue—or what he claims is a new issue. As a matter of fact it is the same issue as that which the American people voted down by an overwhelming majority in 1868. At that time the declaration of the Democrats was: "Where the obligations of the government do not expressly state upon their face, or the law under which they were issued does not provide that they shall be paid in coin, they ought, in right and in justice, to be paid in the LAWFUL MONEY of the United States."

One currency for the government and the people, the laborer and the office holder, the pensioner and the soldier, the producer and the bondholder." The same arguments were then made for a depreciated currency; the same attempts were then made to excite the prejudices of the people against capital and capitalists; the same denunciation of men who have saved a competence from a life of active labor, and who have their savings invested in securities; the same senseless harangue about "British gold," as are now being made by Bryan. The same arguments were then used, although there was no "crime of 1873" to point to and use as a scapegoat. The Republicans denounced repudiation then, as it has now, and carried the election by a majority of 111 in the electoral college and a large popular majority, just as it will in 1896.

Popocrats will get small consolation from the position of Hoke Smith. Before the Chicago convention he denounced the free coinage of silver, and in a speech at Dalton, Ga., Saturday he declared that his financial views were unchanged. He will probably not be invited by Chairman Jones to take the stump outside his own state.

The removal of the loose rocks upon the main streets of our city would be highly appreciated by every bicyclist and every other person who uses the streets. A few days of hobo labor, properly directed, would do the business, and our street commissioner would thereby confer a great favor upon a long-time and badly-jolted community.

If gold goes to a premium of twenty per cent, every man who borrows to meet obligations made under a gold standard will have to borrow $120 for every $100 he has to pay. In other words, he will, in effect, be paying twelve per cent for capital to meet his obligations made under the gold standard.
