WEDNESDAY. - OCT. 28, 1896

Weather Forecast.

PORTLAND, Oct. 28, 1896.
FOR EASTERN OREGON—Tonight and tomorrow fair; stationary temperature.
PAGE. Observer.

WAYSIDE GLEANINGS.

Random Observations and Local Events of Lesser Magnitude.

There will be a regular weekly drill at the armory tonight.

Hon. Binger Hermann speaks Friday evening at the Vogt opera house.

Judge Bennett will deliver a political address at the Baldwin opera house this evening.

The first issue of the Eastern Oregon Observer will appear in La Grande next Thursday.

V. C. Brock has bought a half interest in the Wasco News, and the publishers are now Brock & Armsworthy.

The Umatilla House today made arrangements to get the full election returns. Bulletins will be received every few minutes until the result of the election is known. The first bulletin comes about 8 o'clock.

Fred W. Hendley closed a deal in Pendleton last Friday whereby he disposed of seventeen carloads of wool, or about 280,000 pounds. The price realized was not given out, but the total amount received will not be less than $17,000. The wool will go to Boston and will be shipped as soon as it can be loaded.

Mrs. Fredericks and Mrs. Steele, while driving into town from their home, seven miles distant, about 10 o'clock yesterday morning, were both severely injured. The horse took fright, throwing them both out. Mrs. Fredericks dislocated her shoulder and was bruised about the head, and Mrs. Steele sustained a complete fracture of the thigh. Dr. Hollister was summoned, who is attending to the injured ladies, Mrs. Steele, who is more severely injured, being removed to town today for treatment.

Miss Rosalia Sherman, of Damascus, Syria, is stopping at the Obarr house. She is one of the native needle women of that country in attendance at the world's fair in Chicago. On her present western tour she is making and selling native needle work for the purpose of completing her education before returning to her own country. Her father is a resident missionary in Syria. The young lady is below the medium height, prepossessing in appearance, about 21 years of age, and very much in earnest over her work.

About the most senseless "kick" is that contained in this morning's Dispatch against the members of the McKinley club buying and wearing uniforms. The Dispatch professes to believe the money spent for this gala attire had better have gone to charity. However one may think as to whether or not the McKinley club was organized to distribute old shoes and ham bones to the deserving poor, the Dispatch must admit that if a number of individuals desire to get up a parade and buy uniforms it is their own business and does not violate any law of morals or expediency. If it is all right to hire a band to increase the efficiency of a political demonstration it is all right to buy uniforms, if the ones who pay for them do so with their own money. Under the Dispatch's code of morals no one would have a right to smoke a cigar, wear a ring, or take a buggy ride. They should keep a continual lookout for objects of charity.

Hurley at the Baldwin.

Mr. Hurley, a California orator, had the audacity to hold an audience until 11 o'clock last night at the Baldwin. The fact that the door kept squeaking for two hours, with departing auditors, before he quit made no difference to Mr. Hurley. He kept hammering away, until the few who remained so long absolutely showed signs of an open revolt before he shut down his talking machine. It is a marvel how anyone remained, and shows the remarkable tolerance of a Dalles audience. His climax almost all ended in a whisper of an inaudible guttural tone, the last chance of detecting his words being destroyed by his making a loud noise with his hands, clapping them together or pounding on the table. He spent the latter part of his address in attempting to prove the oft-repeated charge, originating with the Populist party, that the act of 1873 was a crime. He read sections of that act proving it to his own satisfaction, and quoting the alleged utterances of dead men. He did not point to one living man that composed that congress, nor one living Republican statesman of the present day cotemporaneous with that time, who can yet be approached on this side of the grave, and declare that it was a crime. The cause before the American people today is being argued like a case before a jury, and the testimony the great jury composed of the American people demand is that of living witnesses. The words of the defenseless dead, without affidavit, and under past conditions that may not apply at the present day, are not competent evidence.

Election Dinner.

The way to a man's affections, it is said, is through his stomach. The ladies of the Christian church will furnish meals on election day in the store formerly occupied by W. A. Johnston on Washington street. If you find a man undecided as to how he should vote, take him around and gorge him with chickens and other delicacies, then he will surely vote right.

Official Call.

Six Knight Commander.

PROTECTION WE WANT.

So Says Mr. Ellis, and the Financial Issue Is Secondary.

Hon. W. R. Ellis demonstrated to a large audience last evening that he lacks neither for ideas nor words. He spoke for an hour and a half with an impetuosity of language not yet approached in this campaign. Mr. Ellis does not propose to sidetrack his Republican principles for a single issue. He repeated what he said a few months ago to the McKinley club here that there are other important issues to maintain which are of paramount importance to that of the free coinage of silver. Referring to his own action in having voted for a free coinage measure, he said that made no difference. He may have been wrong; he was not here to apologize for every individual act by every individual member of the Republican party. He may have been wrong in the past. He did not look behind, but before him. He now believed that free silver, coupled with free trade, or what is known as tariff for revenue only would only sink us deeper in financial distress. "The Republican party," said Mr. Ellis, "is the only party who are real bimetallists, for the effort to maintain bimetallism independently of the great commercial nations is impossible. We are a grand nation, but we cannot stand against the universe. Today we have a candidate pledged to promote bimetallism, and the platform provides the only feasible way to get it, through international agreement. England, Germany and France are now moving in that direction, and I believe that the plan to obtain it through an agreement of the nations is safe and can be accomplished.

"Silver has been demonetized. That is a fact. There exists only a question of when it was done. Some say it was in 1873. But I say it was done in 1834, for that was the effect of a law passed through congress in that year. The Republican party has done more for silver than any party. In a single year it has coined more than from the foundation of the government up to 1873. I will frankly confess that at one time I thought there was something in this cry of 'the crime of 1873.' But after a studious application to the facts in the matter I found there was no evidence of fraud. No bill was more generally discussed than that bill. It was printed thirteen different times and was placed on the desk of every member of congress.

"The declaration for bimetallism in the Republican platform is an honest declaration, but to try for it independently would be an experiment, a jump in the dark. Senator Teller himself says that in his opinion it will bring good times, but it will take twenty years to do it. Are we in a condition to wait twenty years for prosperity? I affirm that if we replace on the statute books the laws that were written there in 1894, we will have immediate prosperity.

"Bryan never said a word in 1892 about free silver bringing prosperity.

He claimed then with his party it was the tariff. But the promises of 1892 were broken. When I passed through the East recently I saw the closed factories on account of the operation of the Wilson bill.

"It is not the amount of money, but the activity of it. We want confidence that when money is invested it will bring a return to the investor. We want the factories opened, then there will be plenty of work at remunerative wages." Mr. Ellis drove home the protective argument by a simple illustration. A sheep herder had told him he had saved $6 on the price of a woolen suit of clothes in a year, but his wages had been reduced $20 a month, and had therefore lost in that year $240 on wages. "Four times have we turned from the free trade policy to protection and every time we have re-established prosperity. Is it not safe, therefore, to return to it for the fifth time in full confidence that prosperity will return?"

Notice to Observe Flag Day.

To the Republican Clubs of Oregon: Saturday, October 31st, having been designated by Chairman Hanna, of the Republican National Committee, as "flag day," when all who intend to vote for McKinley and Hobart and to maintain the honor of the nation and the perpetuity of its institutions, are requested to decorate their homes and places of business with the national colors and display the stars and stripes, to remain until after election, the executive committee of the Republican League of Oregon urges Republican clubs in the state to make a liberal display of the national colors as requested; also that each individual member of the clubs do the same and wear a bow or knot of the national colors on the lapel of the coat. It is the desire of the national committee that all clubs get up as large a local demonstration as possible, winding up with a procession and speeches. This should be the program in every locality.
H. L. WELLS, Secretary.
