A REGISTRATION LAW.

The Australian ballot law has done wonders towards purifying the ballot, preventing intimidation or coercion, and reducing vote buying to a minimum. Under its workings the temptation to buy votes is practically removed, for no matter how much cash changes hands, there is no means by which the purchaser can ascertain of the goods have been delivered. There are only two ways that intimidation may be used, and only one by which it can be ascertained that the scheme has been successful, and even this is but a half-way measure. The one way is to discharge employes before the election, promising to re employ them on the election of a certain candidate. This, of course, makes the voter directly interested in the result, his job depending on it, and is therefore strongly inducive in his voting. The other way is to hold the threat of discharge over employes of the opposite political faith, or those known to be opposed to the election of the person desired by the employer, if they go to the polls. This only accomplishes half the result of a purchase, because while taking one vote away from the other side it fails to add one to the opposite party. The latter plan is not safe to pursue, because there is a law punishing anyone who keeps another away from the polls, or attempts to do so. The former, while not a statutory crime, is a moral one, but one it would be difficult to punish.

We may take it as true that the Australian ballot law is nearly as perfect as any system that can be invented. All that it now needs is a registration law. The objection to the registration law, heretofore raised, was that it was unconstitutional because it (the constitution) provides that a voter may vote for district officers in any district, and for state officers anywhere in the state. The Oregonian points out that this is no objection at all since the voter could be provided with a certificate of registration which would show that he was a legal voter in this state, showing also the precinct and county where he resided. Armed with this he could vote, as the constitution permits, in such districts as he might be in, for such officers as he would be permitted to vote for now. The registration of every voter would make it easily possible to detect illegal voting, as the tally sheets could be provided with a column for noting the precinct and county the voter was registered in.

This would give us what every good citizen, regardless of politics, should desire, a fair, square ballot, where every legal voter could have his vote cast and counted, and where the hobo and the itinerant vote seller could not barter away their own votes, and then kill someone else's. By all means let us have a registration law.

It is announced in a telegram on the Cuban question, and the statement is given as a sufficient reason why this government should feel very kindly towards Spain, that "Spain remained perfectly neutral during the presidential election." That was awfully kind of the old girl, wasn't it? If Spain had just thrown her influence on one side or the other the whole "bilin" of us might have gone bouncing into the dim oblivion of nowhere. "Remained neutral?" Do the noble descendants of Don Quixote think that an election in this country is like that in those countries peopled with its race; only another name for a revolution? How else could "Spain remain neutral?"

The matter of prospecting our coal fields is receiving considerable attention. This is as it should be, and while the iron is hot, it is time to hit it hard. Keep the good work going until The Dalles becomes as famous for its black diamonds as it is for the beauty of its women and the brilliancy of its newspaper men—and other things of that kind.

Stands at the Head.

Aug. J. Bogel, the leading druggist of Shreveport, La., says: "Dr. King's New Discovery is the only thing that cures my cough, and it is the best seller I have." J. F. Campbell, merchant of Safford, Ariz., writes: "Dr. King's New Discovery is all that is claimed for it; it never fails, and is a sure cure for Consumption, Coughs, and Colds. I cannot say enough for its merits." Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds is not an experiment. It has been tried for a quarter of a century, and today stands at the head. It never disappoints. Free trial bottles at Blakeley & Houghton's drug store.
