LESSON FOR THE EAST.
Henry Watterson is perhaps the most picturesque figure in the newspaper world. At the same time he is one of the most far-seeing and able editorial writers of the age. If he could impress his ideas given below on the people of the East, he would perform an act that would be of greater benefit to the whole country than anything which has occurred since the organization of our government. The greatest danger to our institutions lies in the creating of sectional feeling, and only by some concessions from every section can the peace of the great whole be maintained. Circumstances have naturally concentrated the wealth of the country, and on the use of that wealth depends the peace and prosperity of the whole country. Mr. Watterson was asked the question, and made the reply given below:

"Do you apprehend the serious growth of the new sectionalism which, with the death of the old sectionalism, seems to be struggling into life in America?"
"If human experience goes for anything and is even to count for much, the world ought to be wiser for the lessons it has had. I am afraid, however, that wealth and power have not grown wise enough to scent danger before it is upon them. The Eastern section of our country is already in danger. I have an impression that it does not see this. Yet it might, with profit to itself and to us all, read a chapter out of our own history, and take a hint in time from the experience of the South. The institution of African slavery was thought to confer great benefits upon its possessors. It produced in the South a distinct caste. Recognized by the constitution, property in man came to take on a kind of divine right, and, at last, its supporters went to war to defend it. Nothing should have been clearer than that war was the best way to destroy it. England had got rid of slavery in her colonies. Russia had extinguished serfdom. Brazil was preparing to emancipate her slaves. Everywhere, except in the southern states of the American Union, the world was set against slavery. To cling with tenacity to so untenable, and, as time has since revealed, to so profitless a system of labor, to say nothing about morals, was singularly shortsighted in the public men of the South; but to take the field in its behalf and against such odds, seems inconceivable from the standpoint of national statesmanship. But the South did it, and dearly paid the consequences. Let the East take to itself the lesson of the South. In its concentration of the wealth of the country, and in its ostentatious display of its wealth, in the gradual cultivation of caste, in the tendency to hug its vast riches, and in the finding of means to keep its millions at home, let it behold a danger it will do well to consider in the light of both ancient and modern history, and if it has any real statesmen they cannot put their genius and resources to better uses than by the construction of policies which will bring them alliances and make them friends—policies wise and broad, justifying in some measure the unlimited accumulations they have been able to pile up in such a relatively short compass of time. Those accumulations not only serve to breed corruption among themselves, but they unite against the simple rights of property all the forces of cupidity and rapine, operating on agrarian and sectional lines. States have been saved before now by timely forecast. Only pride and a very foolish pride at that, has led Spain to defy the laws alike of God and nature in Cuba. Only pride, the pride of wealth and caste, will keep the East from seeing the truth that it must make a partner of the rest of the country; not only by generous and expanding policies, but above all by just policies, harder perhaps to realize than any other policies. We can always be generous, but it is not always easy to be just, wisely just, even to ourselves."

"What would you advise the Democratic party to do, Mr. Watterson?"
"What I would advise it to do, and what it is likely to do, are different matters. Perhaps it could not do anything better by way of a starter than to appoint the next 8th of January as a day of fasting and prayer."

The learned savans now say that the big hat pressing on a woman's forehead is often the cause of severe headaches. We see no reason why the rule of like causes and like effects should be varied to meet the vagaries of the medical fraternity. An Indian woman will carry from 100 to 200 pounds, sustaining a large portion of the load by means of a strap passed over the forehead, and she does not have headaches or hysteria either.

At Cincinnati yesterday a man stole a tray of diamonds from a jeweler, and being closely pursued, he dropped the diamonds in the wash-room of an adjoining room and escaped. It is supposed from the speedy manner in which the tray of diamonds was re-taken that the pursuer had the four-spot in his pocket when he followed the knave.
