GETTING REAL MEAN.

And now comes the startling news that Havana is being fortified by having a barbed wire fence built around it.

The next thing we hear will be that the Havana city council has passed an ordinance forbidding insurgents to run at large in the city limits.

The U. S. senate needs to get a move on, for what with over-dosing the insurgents with trochas, and deliberately preparing to tear their clothes, the cause of Cuba is getting indeed desperate.

San Francisco has a real live queen, or rather a real live person who was a queen, within her limits, in the person of Liliuokalani.

No one seems to know why she left her island home, or what she came to this country for.

Of course this is all guess work, and we must wait for genuine and reliable information until the special editions of the San Francisco papers arrive with the glaring headlines announcing the arrival of the only Queen Lil.

The Oregonian discusses the railroads of Oregon and the railroad commissioners at some length in its issue of the 11th, and concludes its criticisms of the commission by suggesting that if it is not abolished, it at least be limited to one commissioner and a clerk. The suggestion is a good one, though it goes hardly far enough, and an amendment striking out the words "one commissioner and" would be in order and conform more nearly to our ideas.
