LIVING MASTODONS.

Alaska Indians Declare That the Mam-

In conversation with a gentleman, formerly of Denver, who came out this fall with a party of miners, we learned that the existence of living mastodons near the headwaters of the White river was not the mere fabrication of the Northern furriers, but that the stick Indians had positively told him that not later than five years ago such animals had been seen by them, says a writer in the Alaska news. One of the Indians said that while hunting one day in that unknown section he came across an im-Miss Laura Thompson is up from mense track, sunk to a depth of several Portland spending a few days at home. inches in the moss, and from the description as the Indian marked it out to him in the sand, it much resembled an elephant's track, and was larger around than a barrel. Upon striking it, the Indian followed up this curious trail, which to all appearances was fresh, and tracking from one immense stride to the other for a distance of several miles, he came in full view of his game. And what game! The hunter gave one look, then turned and fled as though pursued by the evil one.

These Indians as a class are the bravproportions of this new kind of game both startled and filled the hunter, brave as he was, with great fear, and he imagined his only safety lay in swift and immediate flight. He described it as being larger than Harper's (the post trader's) store, with great, shining, yellowish tusks and mouth large enough to swallow him at a single gulp. He said as were the huge bones scattered over The topic for the morning services at that section. If such an animal is now the Methodist church tomorrow is in existence, and other Indians, and altitude, and one but rarely visited by human beings, and these only Indians, We also have no reason to doubt the Inthe Yukon country was inhabited by
