FORECLOSE AND SELL.

The Oregonian advocates the re-funding of the debts of the Union and Central Pacific railroads, and giving them an extension of time in which to settle with the government for debts now due it.

The proposed scheme, engineered by Mr. Collis P. Huntington, is to have the government extend the time of payment, at a reduced rate of interest, a rate way below what the government would have to pay for the use of the money.

It looks as though the best thing that can be done is to foreclose, and if the government does not want to operate the roads, give them away.

As the roads are at present managed, Huntington controls the Central, and thus prevents opposition to the Southern Pacific.

Foreclosure and sale is the only sensible remedy, for if the government gets nothing, it will at least be able to pay up, protect its loss, and make the most it can of a very bad bargain.

INFORMATION WANTED.

While the authorities on financial matters are airing their knowledge they would satisfy a very general craving for information if they would explain why gold does not come into this country in payment for its exports? Why money is loaned, New York money, in England at three per cent, while the farmers cannot get it for ten? Why real estate in the shape of farm lands is no longer considered security for borrowed money?
