ANTI-SUFFRAGE.

The anti suffrage woman suddenly comes to the front and antagonizes the efforts of her deluded sisters, who want the privilege of being placed on an equality with the men.

Like every other question there are two sides to this one.

We have received a letter from Mrs. Anna Parker Pruyne, president of the anti-suffrage association, enclosing some printed matter on the subject. Among other things, Mrs. Anna Parker Pruyne says in her letter to us that "man is a noble creature," for which statement she has our thanks, and that of our fellow "creatures." We have heard it stated in our schoolboy days that the horse was a noble animal, and we are glad that man is ranked as his equal. The thought is somewhat saddened by the reflection that the horse is rapidly becoming obsolete, despite his nobility, and we fear the same thing may happen to man if woman is to take his place. We cheerfully admit her superiority in many things, and because she is superior we fear for man the same fate that has overtaken the horse—a fall in value and a crowded market. Electricity has done up the horse; woman may yet do up the man.

We welcome Mrs. Anna Parker Pruyne and Mrs. Anna Parker Pruyne's associates in the good cause of anti-suffrage. There is just so much work to be done in the world, and there are men enough to do their part of it. Just why woman wants to enter the field to reduce wages and work to support man, instead of letting his wages alone and him support her, we cannot understand.

The believers in woman suffrage, or suffering, claim that woman would purify politics. That may be true; but when she had, what would purify woman?

Speaking of woman suffrage, we wonder what effect the voting of women could have on Oregon politics. Would not Bourne, his side whiskers and his sack, be even more prominently in evidence than now? Wouldn't a new seal-skin sacque, a diamond ring, or other gewgaws, appeal as strongly to the feminine legislator as the bedizened female and the coin of the realm do to the masculine one? Would the Mrs. Joneses be any more faithful to their political pledges than the Mr. Joneses? or be able to find their way into the house, even when it is raining, any better? We wot not, with a great big wot. The female lobbyists now at Salem are not adding anything to the purity of politics, and they are not doing much towards solving the problem of the deadlock. On the contrary, they are said to be one, or rather 16 to 1, of the most powerful inducements against organization.

The private secretary chosen by President McKinley divides his name in the middle, and signs it J. Addison Porter. It is safe to say that he will not be a success. Any man who has the good, old-fashioned name of John, and prefers to wag his ears to the name of J. Addison instead, proves that he has plenty of ears to wag.

When the Indian puts on civilization he must accept it with all its evils. Those at the Lapwai agency have discovered this. When the government paid them for their lands some of the stockholders in the Moscow bank prevailed upon them to put their money in that institution for safe keeping. The bank failed, and about $40,000 of money belonging to the Indians came up missing. The Indians are quite indignant, not liking their white brethren's way of doing business; but they will know more when they get more experience with civilized people. In the meanwhile none of the officers of the defunct bank are preparing for their summer outing in the neighborhood of the agency. It is not a healthful resort for bank officials just now.

The situation at Salem is getting desperate. Only the other morning Representative Howser was offered a bribe. He says so himself. He was in bed at the time, and the hour chosen by the briber was before daylight. It was a deed of darkness. Howser don't know who the assailant of his morals was; but he valiantly put his head under the bed clothes and preserved his virtue. The bold, bad man offered him, he doesn't know how much; he couldn't see it, but he thinks it was a large sum. But he didn't take it. It being dark he couldn't see his way clear to do so. Just how his nocturnal visitor got into his room he does not know. He must have leaked in through the key-hole. But Howser was proof against him. He threatened to call a man, and his assailant fled; fled without leaving any trace of his identity, and alas! took the boodle with him.
