TUESDAY, - - - MARCH 16, 1897

EASTERN OFFICE—230 to 234 Temple Court, N. Y. City. E. KATZ, Agent.

AS HE SEES IT.

Mr. Wallace McCamant is in Washington looking after Senator Corbett's fight for a seat in the senate. Mr. McCamant is a clever young gentleman, but his intellect needs broadening, deepening, lengthening and straightening before it will reach the full measure of its capacity as he sees and feels it. He looks at the senatorial situation from the standpoint of self-interest only, and before the venerable gentleman who desires a seat in the senate, the ecstatic vision of the United States district attorneyship for Oregon, with smiling features and beckoning hands, looms up ever present, to dim the sight and warp the judgment of one Wallace McCamant. He sees only the flowery official pathways his feet will tread should Corbett be seated; and the vision of a violated constitution, the people robbed of their rights, the precedent that the factious minority shall rule established, and a blow struck at the United States senate that will probably annihilate it, he puts behind him. His opinion on the senatorial situation is conclusive evidence of his utter unfitness for the position of district attorney, for it shows he is willing that the rights of the people shall be trampled under foot that Wallace McCamant may obtain office.

Oregon needs both her senators, and while we do not doubt but that Mr. Corbett would represent her interests to the best of his ability, she cannot afford to establish the precedent. As surely as the sun rises if she does her act will come back some time to her shame and her sorrow. She needs her senators, and the nation needs them, but she needs them only when they enter at the door, and not when they make burlesque entry through the windows. She needs her senators, but not at the price she must pay for Corbett. She needs them not unless they are elected by and with the consent of the people, according to law, and in compliance with the terms of the constitution. She needs them not when they are the result of an unholy alliance of Portland bossism, harlequin Democrats and cat's-paw Populists, banded together to defeat the will of the people.

Mr. McCamant would like the district attorneyship, and we have no objection to his having it; but Oregon can get along without either senator or district attorney, and will do so rather than have her rights trampled in the filthy wallow made by Simon, Bourne, U'Ren, the Oregonian, and all that porcine drove.

Tomorrow the Nevada Corbett contest will be settled. From present indications the fight is not going to be attended by the crowd that was expected. Dan Stuart yesterday thought that not more than 3,500 would be inside the pavilion when the exhibit was opened. The other Corbett contest will probably hang on longer.

We rise to remark that the lecture field in Oregon is a fine one with the proper subject, and suggest that Rev. I. D. Driver could fill every hall in Oregon, if he would deliver a discourse on what he knows about the Salem fiasco. Driver knows, and he knows how to tell what he knows.

"Perpetrating a ruse on truth" is what a prominent statesman called a round-about method of bribery. After all it sounds better that way, and there is a great deal in a name.

It was with pleasure we noted yesterday that the diamond drill to be used in prospecting our coal fields is on its way here. We have great faith in the opinion that there is good paying veins of coal lying underneath The Dalles, and hope to see that opinion verified during the coming summer.

Observation leads us to believe that those who cry loudest against the "new journalism" are those who read the literature so-called, with the greatest avidity, and the newspapers that kick against it hardest are those who would adopt that style of journalism if they could.

While The Dalles has passed through a period of business depression worse than any before experienced, the outlook is quite cheerful, and when the roads once get in condition it is expected that business of all kinds will start in with a rush.

Even money is being placed on Corbett and Fitzsimmons, which leads us to believe the talent are weakening on Corbett, and are fast coming to the conclusion that he is going to be beaten.
