The only Republican Daily Newspaper in Wasco County.

WEDNESDAY, - - MARCH 17, 1897

EASTERN OFFICE—230 to 234 Temple Court, N. Y. City. E. KATZ, Agent.

HARDLY CONSISTENT.

It is amusing to read day after day the frantic tirades of the Oregonian and Telegram against the soul-harrowing red rag "New Journalism." Both of them talk themselves out of breath in their pious wrath against this class of newspapers. They publish gleefully the statement that the San Francisco Examiner has been refused admittance to the public library. They launch into fervid dissertations on the evils of "sporting news" and burn the midnight electricity searching their mutual onomasticon for words of sufficient length to express the withering scorn, the virtuous indignation, the superb contempt those family journals have for everything low in journalism.

The careful observer might conclude that there is method in their madness, that their objection to hooking come from the fact that their ox is getting hooked, and that their fearsome diatribes are for the object only of forcing the San Francisco papers out of circulation in Oregon, and especially in Portland. Their cases would be much stronger if they practiced, even in a small way, what they preach so voluminously. Do they do this? Well, hardly. If we may be pardoned by them the slang, Nit, Last night's Telegram's leader entitled "At the Bottom of It," is devoted to applying salve to its own sore spots by abusing "new journalism." We clip the following from amidships in that editorial:

That is why the murder of a prostitute by her male consort gets more space than the extra session of congress. That is why the uprising in Crete is crowded out to make room for the sayings and doings at Carson City. That is why Gomez and Weyler and Cuba's fate are boiled down, while Corbett and Fitzsimmons and the pugilistic championship are given pages.

Isn't that fine scorn? Doesn't that show the high moral plane upon which the editor circulates? Doesn't it send a cold chill over one just from the contemplation of the ethereal and arctic purity of that spiritual news disseminator? But hold! There is another phase to this situation. There are others. In fact there are just thirteen other notices scattered through that same paper that read as follows:

Tomorrow's Telegram will contain a full account of the Corbett Fitzsimmons contest, and the other fights at Carson.

It will be seen from this that the Telegram readily ascends to new journalism when the mighty nickel beckons thereto, and the only reason the Portland papers are not new journals is because it is a luxury that comes high.

Senator Wilson of Washington is making an effort to secure the revocation of President Cleveland's order establishing forest reserves. While Wilson is attending to this, the Oregon delegation needs to get in and have the Cascade reserve diminished. The first slice to take from it should be township one south ten east, which is nearly all the very finest kind of orchard land, and which, at the time it was included in the reservation, had thirty-two homesteads included in it. These families that settled on the lands in good faith are by this law prevented from having neighbors, are shut off from schools, and have a heavy burden of taxation to keep up the roads. It was unjust to them in the first place, and the injustice should be remedied by throwing the township open to settlement. There is but little timber on it, it lies well down in Hood River valley, and no good is accomplished by keeping it within the reserve.

Through the kindness of W. C. Allaway we have been permitted to peruse the initial number of the "University of Oregon Monthly," published at Eugene, and as its name implies, by the students of the university. We confess to a liking for that kind of literature, not that the ideas are always brilliant; not that the language is always the purest, but because in the study of the literary style of those drinking deep of the spring, we may form an idea of what shall come after us. The university, faculty and students, may well feel proud of its new paper, for it is a gem. The title page contains a poem by Homer D. Angell, which shows considerable poetical genius; and from that to the back page the little paper is filled with matter interesting, instructive and extraordinarily well written.

It is with a feeling akin to joy that we note the victory of Fitzsimmons. Not that we have any interest in the big bruiser, but that the wifely devotion of Mrs. Fitz, who put her money on her husband, may meet with its deserved reward. There is another reason also, and that is that Pompadour Jim had attained that degree of pride in himself and contempt for others that needed the customary fall. He got it, and he gets no sympathy with it.
