SOME PLAIN FACTS.

The Telegram yesterday, as it promised, indulged in "new journalism," and was the better for it. We venture the assertion that it sold more papers of last night's issue than it has for months. Why? The answer is simple. "Because the public want that kind of news." Its all very well to prate about scandal and crime and all that sort of thing being given prominent place in the big dailies, but the people want it, and as long as they do, it is going to be furnished them. The papers that furnish it are going to get the circulation, and these that do not are going to the wall.

These be the days of the spectacular. The people demand novelties, and press and pulpit rise to meet the demand. We do not defend the taste; we deprecate it, but what would you? As long as there is a demand for liquor, there will be saloons; as long as there are smokers, there will be cigars and pipes; as long as there are brutal instincts, there will be brutal sports; as long as there is lechery, there will be means for its gratification; as long as there are Diomedes, there will be Cressids; as long as there are fools, there will be dialect stories; and just as long as there is money in supplying these demands, there will be an abundance of people ready to supply them, even at the risk of imprisonment for violating the laws.

We believe the world would be much better off without many things that it has; but it wants them, and it is going to have them. We have the utmost contempt for the "holier than thou" journalism, and we can lift our hat to the promoter of a prize fight, the publisher of an off color newspaper, or, if you please, the pandar to depraved public taste, with much more self respect left, than we can to that class of newspapers that preach against prize fights, and publish columns of lies to assist in holding up a legislature; that pean hosannas over the action of an asinine board of directors of a public library, and are as silent as the damned over a violated constitution and a cowardly political assassination. We have no patience with that Oriental modesty that compels the covering of the female face, even though it takes all the clothes from the balance of the body to do it.

New journalism, as the term is understood, is far from perfect, yet new journalism is what we need. A new journalism that does not gag at a goat and swallow a legislative hold-up; a new journalism that dares to tell the truth, regardless of effect on parties or policies; a new journalism that is always for the right and always against the wrong. We shall have that kind of new journalism when we get into Utopia—not before. Newspapers can run counter to public sentiment and public demand to a limited extent; beyond that they perish of their own goodness. To their credit be it said they are far in advance of public morals now. They will probably always remain in that position; but until humanity is created with different tastes, different desires, higher aims and nobler resolves, the "new journal" will live and thrive and prosper. Until that time the newspapers that throw their X rays on the vices and follies of man will find greater circulation than those which tell of the virtues that most of us do not possess.

It is probable that nine out of ten Americans desired to see Corbett whipped by Fitzsimmons. Not that they were fascinated with Bob, but that they were disgusted with Jim. His big mouth, his braggadocio, his treatment of his first wife, and his posing as a prize-ring humorist and an all-around tough, created this sentiment. He was Gentleman Jim when he whipped Sullivan, and in six months his conduct was such that to call him a conyict would have entitled every jail bird in the country to damages for slander. Fitzsimmons will never take that road. He has no false ideas about the greatness of the championship, and will be so busily engaged in defending his title that he won't have time to get the swell head.

Baltimore has a ladies' club, the members whereof, by common agreement, appeared on the first rainy day in March in short skirts that came to within not less than five inches of the ground, nor more than six inches from it. The short skirts proved a great convenience, and the ladies assert that they have come to stay. The idea is a good one, but why wear short skirts only on rainy days? The dragging of old cigar stubs and dry filth is just as bad as the mud. Why not cut all the skirts on that pattern?
