ABIDE BY THE LAW.

The decision of Judge Northrup of Multnomah county and some of the other county judges, not to pay over the state's taxes, is liable to cause considerable discussion and perhaps litigation. The existing conditions show how quickly a bad example will be followed and how prone the mind is to palliate and condone unlawful acts one wishes to do or has done, by pointing to the fact that someone else has done the same thing. The legislature failed utterly to do its duty: This being taken as the basis, Judge Northrup concludes that he will utterly fail to do his. The law requires the counties to pay over to the state treasurer the state taxes at a given time. Now it is none of the county judges' business what the treasurer does with it, or whether the state has use for it or not. That is the business of the state treasurer, who is responsible for the money when it is paid to him, and whose receipts is all the counties paying are entitled to. Let us see. Suppose the county judges should take it upon themselves to refuse to obey the plan mandate of the statute, and refuse to pay the state's proportion of the taxes because the state had no use for it. What would the county judges do if the taxpayers should take the same view of it and refuse to pay the state portion of the tax because the county had no use for it and did not intend to pay it to the state treasurer? Would not the individual taxpayer have as much right to do this as the county judge to refuse to pay over the state's portion of the money? And then, as Judge Mays suggests, suppose after using the state's money to pay county indebtedness, a special session of the legislature should be called and the state should need and demand its money. What would be done then? The refusal of those empowered to make laws to abide by laws already made was a bad example that has borne abundant fruit. Let us hope that the crop will not increase.

BEAMS AND NOTES.

The Rev. Ray Palmer, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Portland, last Sunday devoted his time to the subject, "The Demoralizing Influence of Prize-fighting." We have no doubt Rev. Palmer was honest and conscientious in his opinions, especially when he commended the manly words of the editor of the Oregonian; but—well, there are butts and butts. When we read Mr. Palmer's fervid description of the prize fight we could hardly repress the thought, "How he would have enjoyed seeing it." The very scent of the battle from afar caused his nostrils to dilate and he unconsciously falls into the language of the prize ring, as for instance when he expressed the regret that they did not "do each other up." But—and here is another but—Mr. Palmer deprecated the prize fight on account of the "spirit of gambling engendered." Mr. Palmer has evidently not been in Portland long. Let him withdraw his gaze from Carson city for a few moments. Let him rest his gaze on North Portland, where Phryne's caricatures hold forth, where degraded women supporting degraded men ply their infamous traffic publicly, where every gambling device known is in operation, where shows go on behind closed doors that would make Theristes blush at his own immodesty and a Satyr long to become all animal! Prize fighting is not an ennobling thing, but it is a poor scapegoat indeed to pursue into the mountains, for it cannot bear away such sins as are hidden behind it. We venture the assertion that there is more wickedness taking place in Portland in one night, more that would make Decency forever hide her face, than ever occurred at or followed from all the prize fights of all the world since the time when Aeneas, fleeing from Troy, landed to celebrate the national games and pitted his cestus-equipped boxers against each other. The Carson prize fight dumped into the midst of Portland's "amusements" could the latter be seen together, would be an island of scab in an ocean of pus.

The Oregonian today has quite a long article concerning the setting apart of Memaloose island for a burial ground for the Warm Spring Indians, and telling quite a story about Vic Trevitt and others. The story is all right, but the Memaloose island set apart by the secretary of the interior is not the famous island where Trevitt is buried, but one east of The Dalles near the foot of the rapids.

Dangers of the Grip.

The greatest dangers from La Grippe is of it resulting in pneumonia. If reasonable care is used, however, and Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is taken, all danger will be avoided. Among the tens of thousands who have used this remedy for la grippe, we have yet to learn of a single case having resulted in pneumonia, which shows conclusively that this remedy is a certain preventive of that dread disease. It will affect a permanent cure in less time than any other treatment. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by Blakeley & Houghton.
