Story of a Demure Schoolmistress.

A bachelor teacher who was in the habit of punishing refractory pupils by using a ruler on the hand, recently had occasion to chastise a pretty miss of 16 summers. The mischievous girl advanced to the desk, and the teacher said: "Give me your hand, Nellie." Her black eyes twinkled, as she demurely said: "Mr. B—, this is so sudden; you will have to ask papa."

THE ORDER OF "MULES."

Peculiar Anti-Crime Organization of Kentucky and West Virginia.

It Has Become a Terror to Murderers and Cattle Thieves and Evil-Doers of Every Description—Its Origin and Conduct.

Unquestionably the most unique order in the United States is the "Mules," a secret organization of farmers in this county and the several adjoining counties of this state and West Virginia. Organized just after the close of the war, and on somewhat the same plan as the regulators of the far west, or perhaps more after the fashion of the rangers of the Texas plains, the order has constantly grown in favor until now the membership is estimated to reach well on toward 3,000.

Following the close of the war there was for a number of years in the immediate neighborhood an alarming run of lawlessness. The principal occupation of a great majority of the back county communities appeared to be horse stealing and general thievery. Something had to be done to stop it, as the authorities were wholly unable to cope with the offenders. In this extremity the resourceful mind of one of the best known physicians in the county evolved the idea of an organization for the mutual protection of the farmers. The result was soon felt in the presence of the Mutual Protective Society, of which only the most responsible farmers and citizens, regardless of occupation, were eligible to membership.

The first proclamation of the new order was a candid statement of its purposes and conditions, and a warning tersely worded for the benefit of all transgressors of the laws of the county and state. A promise of the early breaking up of the several bands of horse thieves then operating in this and the Big Sandy country was also made. This latter provision was the source of considerable sarcasm on the part of the gangs named, who resorted to the white cap manner of placarding their answers of defiance. When the first raid was made on the farmers' stock it was of a more general character than had ever before been attempted, presumably to show the small esteem in which the officers, and the lodge as well, were held.

The members of the order turned out en masse and speedily ran down several of the gang and so closely chased the leaders that they were compelled to flee to the mountains. Convictions soon followed, and the order became recognized as an important factor in the county government. Similar experiences followed, and the membership of the order increased at a rapid rate. New lodges sprang up in adjoining counties, and each community had a branch, with an organization and a code of signals sufficient to enable the warning of the entire membership to the field in the shortest possible order. Whenever a case of horse-stealing was reported the order would turn out 400 or 500 strong and scour the whole region until the animals were recovered or the thief captured.

Other and similar offenses were given attention equally substantial. Under these conditions the gangs soon became scattered, their work most hazardous and the morals in general of the county as good as could be asked. Throughout the past 20 years the unceasing watchfulness and energy of the order have maintained the same effect in the mountainous country. Only recently the "Mules" turned out nearly 800 strong in Lawrence county to investigate the supposed murder of an arduous peddler from Cincinnati. They soon resolved the case into one of pure spite-work, in which the victim was an innocent sheep, and the object the desire to cast a suspicion upon one of the natives as would cause him to leave the country. A warning was left publicly posted for the benefit of the conspirators. Down in Greenup they are still working on the mysterious case of the murder of one of their members whose body was found nearly two years ago in a creek with a rope around his neck and unmistakable evidence of violence. They will never leave the trail until something tangible is developed. Here in this county but a few months ago the order sent a representative almost to the Atlantic coast to bring back a man wanted for breaking the law. The man was produced for trial at the time originally appointed. Over in Wayne county, W. Va., two convictions were made at a recent term of court as a result of the order's work.

While the work of the order has been most acceptable, and most of the members are sincere in their intentions at their joining, it has also been made the tool of politics to some extent. Numerous men have become members simply to wield a little political influence over the order, to their personal benefit, or in the interest of their friends. Still, it is steadily growing, and surprisingly so in the towns along the river, where their hold formerly was very insignificant. The peculiar designation, "Mules," comes through the adoption some years ago of the outline of an attenuated mule as the emblem of the order.

Once a year the "Mules" hold a meeting of their grand lodge, and this will be held this year at Greenup, early in the coming month. Last year the meeting was held at Lockwoods, in Lawrence county, and it was estimated that 10,000 people were present during the two days' session. The order is yearly adopting more revised rules, and it will probably eventually emerge into a full-fledged secret society of the old-fashioned order. Though they still turn out en masse and ride over the country in the fashion generally accredited the moonshiners of the south, they are unalterably opposed to violence in any fashion and strictly adhere to the enforcement of the law along the ordinary lines.—Ashland (Ky.) Cor. Louisville Courier-Journal.

Experiments with a hermetically sealed rubber bottle containing water have shown that the rubber is not absolutely watertight. The filled bottle weighed 17 ounces 4 drams; at the end of one year the weight was 17 ounces 2 drams; nine years, 16 ounces; eighteen years, 14 ounces 2 drams; twenty-three years, 13 ounces 4 drams; twenty-five years, 7 ounces 8 drams; twenty-eight years, 3 ounces 14 drams; thirty years, 3 ounces 12 drams, the water being entirely gone.

The Law Times, of London, calls attention to the fact that the privy council, of which the cabinet is merely a committee unknown to the law, has entirely ceased to hold meetings for purposes of deliberation and has become a body of a merely ceremonial nature. So completely, however, have the functions of the two bodies been dissociated that whereas the privy council cannot meet except under the presidency of the sovereign, the sovereign cannot constitutionally preside at a meeting of the cabinet.

Dangers of the Grip.

The greatest dangers from La Grippe is that it resulting in pneumonia. If reasonable care is used, however, and Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is taken, all danger will be avoided. Among the tens of thousands who have used this remedy for la grippe, we have yet to learn of a single case having resulted in pneumonia, which shows conclusively that this remedy is a certain preventive of that dread disease. It will affect a permanent cure in less time than any other treatment. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by Blakeley & Houghton.
