THE WAR SPIRIT.

The world is about to see two great nations engage in mortal combat. It is long since, on the continent, such a war as that in which Turkey and Greece are about to engage has been fought. Fraught with the gravest import to the nations of Europe, the outcome will be anxiously watched by all the peoples.

Whether or not this contest will be the forerunner of a great European war is an open question. There are many things to indicate that it is. The peace that has existed in Europe for many years has, in the light of history, been unnatural. It has long been the opinion of thinking men that a giant struggle between the great European powers was inevitable. Perhaps it is to come now, and perhaps it is to come later. That it must come there seems to be no doubt.

As far back as the history of the human race can be traced war has ever been practiced. It is an instinct of humanity. As if implanted in the human breast by divine power itself, man turns to war as his natural occupation. In savage tribes the warrior is the ruling power in the government, and in our civilization the highest honors are heaped upon those whose profession is that of arms. More than once a brilliant military record has served to seat a man in the chair of the chief executive of the nation. While in the last decade in the United States more attention has been paid to the arts of peace, the war spirit but slumbers. There is no necessity for its being aroused, but its presence will serve to stir up admiration for the achievements of the coming great contest in another land.

So long as man is constituted on the present plan, the dream of the idealist of a day when tribunals of arbitration will settle all differences will never be realized. While all civilized nations regard war as a great evil, the same nations pay it the highest honors, and as an institution it will probably flourish to the end of the world. The paradise of the ancient Scandinavian was a place where a perpetual state of war existed. In a modified form the love of strife exists in all nations. War has been defined as being a contest between nations or states or between different parties in the same state, carried on by force and with arms, commonly either for defense, for avenging insults and redressing wrongs, for the extension of commerce and acquisition of territory, or to obtain and establish the superiority and dominion of one of the belligerents over the other; also the condition of things created by such a contest. —Spokesman-Review.

Carson City seems destined to become the paradise of the pugilists. The latest statement is that Dan Stuart is to take charge of the gladiatorial arena there, and is already arranging for several first-class meetings. Corbett has challenged Fitzsimmons for another contest, but the latter contemptuously tells him to go and earn a reputation as a fighter instead of a boxer, and he will then accommodate him. Gentleman Jim, it is said, has posted $5,000 to back up his challenge to Champion Bob. It is all long-distance though, for Fitz will have none of it, preferring the certain income he will derive from exhibiting himself, to the uncertain rewards to be won in the ring.

England's weakness lies in her immense merchant marine, which would be at the mercy of an enemy in case of war, and this explains her position in the Cretan affair. England wants peace, not war, and all her efforts are to maintain the European conditions as they have existed the past few years. Her commerce forces her into some unpleasant positions which she would not otherwise take, and gives her at times the appearance of being cowardly.

Two hundred and fifty of the unemployed of San Francisco went to Stockton on the steamer Tuesday, and after having established a camp there, they sent a delegation to the mayor demanding food and transportation to Sacramento. The mayor and city council compromised with them by giving them two days' provisions, the new Coxeyites agreeing to furnish their own transportation, by walking.

Astoria is priding herself much on her railroad to Goble, which promises to be finished this fall. We hope she may derive as much benefit therefrom as she anticipates, but we fear that it will prove a detriment rather than a help. It is not far to Flavel and the points below the old town, and there we fancy the railroad will find its western terminus.
