MORE THAN TWO HUNDRED DEAD

Many Bodies Have Been Denuded of Every Distinguishing Mark—Numerous Prominent Parisians Among Dead.

PARIS, May 5.—The terrible fire at Grand Bazaar de Charate, a temporary wooden structure, 100 yards long and sixty yards wide, erected in the Rue Jean Goujon, for the annual charity fair, of which all the most prominent society ladies of Paris are patronesses, has thrown the French capital into mourning.

The conflagration, which broke out shortly after 4 o'clock yesterday, in Kinetograph booth, near the stall of Duchess d'Uzes, while from 1500 to 2000 people were present, is believed to have caused the loss of over 200 lives. As this dispatch is sent, early Wednesday morning, 111 charred corpses have been recovered, together with twelve portions of bodies, the identity of which may never be established.

Since 5 o'clock this morning, crowds have been flocking to the Palais du L'Industrie, where many bodies and injured persons were taken. At 6 o'clock a detachment of the garde republicaine relieved the detachment of infantry which had been on duty all night about the scene of the catastrophe.

SEARCHING THE RUINS. The search for the dead continues. Quantities of coins, watches, rings, necklaces and bracelets have been picked up in the debris. As soon as bodies are claimed by anxious relatives or others who have been hovering in despair about the spot throughout the night, they are placed in carriages and taken to their former homes.

The scene at night was remarkable. Long lines of infantry were drawn up in cordon around the dreadful spot. Bonfires, torches, electric lights and gas jets used to illuminate the scene, reflected upon the bayonets and accoutrements of the soldiers, and threw a ghastly illumination upon the houses in the vicinity, the windows of which were crowded during the most of the night with people watching the work of horror. Now and then a hearse would be called from the line of vehicles stationed in proximity, a black mass would be tenderly lifted into it, and another unfortunate victim of the conflagration taken to one of the temporary morgues in the Palais du L'Industrie or the neighboring Hospital Beaujeu. Frequently as many as a dozen hearses were gathered together in the court yard and opposite to the entrance to the Palais du L'Industrie. Hundreds of coffins were ranged ready to receive the bodies, in most cases charred beyond recognition.

GRIEF OF THE SURVIVORS.

Upon several occasions a distracted father or mother half mad with grief would endeavor to force his or her way through the line of soldiers or the inner line of police drawn about the blackened ruins. Children were there weeping for lost parents, and the oldest, youngest, and middle-aged joined in murmurs of lamentation and exchanged hopes and fears.

The atmosphere at the hall in the Palais du L'Industrie, where the burned bodies were ranged, was almost unbearable, and there again heartrending scenes were witnessed. Men, women and children passed up and down, weeping distractedly before the lines of black bodies, eagerly scanning the terrible remains, and now and then throwing themselves down by the side of some seemingly unrecognizable corpse in which they by instinct, which no outsider could understand, made out some dearly loved and missing relative.

The test after all is: do you like it? Schilling's Best tea is wholesomer than most other tea; but that isn't why people buy it.

They buy it because they like it.

If they don't like it, they only borrow it—they get their money back of the grocer.
