In the course of time the driver appeared, all in grass, with a short jacket, a big hat and an encomous whip. He carried a imge water bottle, from which all the people had a drink, holding it in the air, and allowing a stream to pour down their thronts. But this required too much experience for J -- to venture when his turn came. The team was now brought out, eight mules, all jingling bells. Those at the pole alone were controlled with reins by a man who sat somewhere underneath, and not by the driver at all. A vast army of meawho always hang about stables succeeded in getting the heads of the squaling, bleking, bucking mass somewhat in the same direction; a horse was attached to the head-a very full horse decorated with real jack-boots and then followed a very small boy with Babel.
