Began Talking Early.

Few will believe it possible for a 3months' old child to talk. However, such is the case, relates the Nashville Banner, and any one can verify the truthfulness of this statement with very little trouble. The parents of the child are Richard and Frankie Cleveland, colored, living at 17 Short street, and the child has been talking since it was one week old. Hundreds have visited the little wonder and have left the house completely mystified at what they have seen and heard.

The child is a girl and differs only from other babies in that it can talk as plainly and be understood as distinctly as a grown person. The voice, of course, is naturally weak, but has none of the utes at the gap, and while here told of baby prattle about it. In addition to seeing the beehive in the rocks. The the child's talking propensities it seems man was so excited over the discovery to be possessed of superior intelligence and gives voice to utterances most as- story, but the facts related by him are tounding, coming as they do from one so voung.

MOUNTAIN LEAKS HONEY

A Natural Storehouse of Sweetness in Pennsylvania.

On Warm Days the Rocks Drip with the Sweets of the Great Beehive Within - Stories Told by Hunters.

Kishacoquillas gap is located in the Tussey,or Seven mountain, range, and is one of the many breaks through this wild chain of mountains leading from Penn's valley into Stone valley.

The Seven mountain range is perhaps the wildest system in the state of Pennsylvania. More than one experienced hunter and woodsman has lost his way in these mountains, and spent weary days wandering around before he found his way to civilization again, and some even failed to return to it, and it is the general belief that their bones lie bleak and bare in some cark ravine of the Tussey range,

Years ago current report said that in one of the least explored of the man; fastnesses of these mountains there was a bee hive in the rocks which cortained enough honey to make a man rich. The story was in effect as follows: Some eight or ten miles north of he gap is one of the deepest ravines inclosing the wildest spot in the entire chain of mountains. Precipitous cliffs to the height of several hundred feet rise on either side, the whole almost completely covered with a dense growth of small shrubbery and trailing vines. while away down at the bottom, so deep that the sun hardly penetrates, owing to the narrowness of the gorge, trickles a small stream or rivulet.

On the north side of this gorge, about half way up the rock side of the cliff, is a fissure in the rock presenting au* opening perhaps 20 feet long and varying in width from two to five feet. Though there is no accurate way of knowing the depth of this fissure or cave in the rock side, it has been est mated at anywhere from 30 to 50 teet, perhaps even more, and possibly with the dimensions of a large cham-

In this rift in the rock a swarm of bees years ago made their home, and there they have continued to abide, multiply and store up honey until three ears ago, when the last report of thera s given by a lost hunter, stated that so numerous had they become that there was one perfect column or string of bees fully a foot thick continually going and coming from the stone hive.

Parties who claim to have seen it aver that on a warm day the sweet fluid, melted by the hot rays of the sun in the brief time its rays penetrate the opening, would trickle down the side of the cliffs and fall in pools at the bottom. Several parties attempted to dislodge the bees and get at the hive of honey, but owing to the difficulty in getting at the opening they were never successful, as the bees always drove them away.

A few days ago a stranger, who claimed to hail from the eastern part of the state, and who had been trudging these mountains in quest of the outloo for game on several of the game proserves located here, stopped a few minthat he could hardly tell a complete Eo closely allied to the current report of years that there is no doubt that he found the wonderful honey deposit.

The man averred that the bees going and coming looked like an immense ar rope at least two feet in diameter watched them there was not one brea

To dislodge the bees and secure the possible task, at the very least a Hersulean one. From the bottom of the avine to where the rift in the rock oceurs is fully 75 feet, and from the ton iown to the rift is almost an equal dismance. The rocky side is very nearly traight up and down, and the small brush and wild vines with which the purchased the Don Juan mine, one of side is almost entirely covered are not the most promising gold producers in embedded securely enough in the rocks to admit of one climbing either up or lown them as a support.

There is only one way by which the cavern could be reached, and then it would be at the risk of destroying the not rid the place of all the bees, and EAST SECOND STREET, when once their home was destroyed all interlopers would want to seek some secure retreat. The stranger averred that he would find a way to get the bees out and get at the store of honey He declared his intention of return ing to make the attempt, at least, and what the results will be remain to be Five, four, or even two tons of honey is a large pile of the sweet stuff, and the smaller amount, if it could be put on the market in anything like a good condition, at the present price of 15 cents per pound, would realize just $600 for the successful bee hunter, a very clever sum to pull from a rift in the mountain side.-Philadelphia Times.

THE PENKNIFE HABIT.

It Afflicts Over Half the People in the World.

Public Walls and Benches Bear Evidence That the Whittling Fiend Is Abroad in the Land - Romantic But Ruinous.

One-half the world is afflicted with the penknife habit, and on that account the poor world presents a most mutilated, scarred and butchered aspect.

Watch the penknife fiend at work. He has just spied a fresh new bench in the park. Everything fresh and new is his own especial prey. He draws back and rivets his eyes upon it, startled at first by the sudden discovery of another victim. Then he pounces upon it, !ike the hawk upon the mild gray field mouse, and whipping out his many-bladed knife, he begins to carefully, maliciously engrave his name, the date of his birth, his present address, his past occupation, and various other important details all over that virgin park

Criminal! He has no other occupation. He was born to the knife, for the knife. It is useless for him to try to be otherwise. He is a ribald, irresponsible nuisance, a mean, petty, relentless destroyer of every smooth surface that crosses his path. Whole walls have been covered by him with fanciful groupings of the alphabet. Beautifully carved staircases and porches have been the subjects of his attacks. Young trees have been killed by his incessant digging into the bark with his pearl-handled wearon. He invades marble halls and scratches his name on beautiful Italian marble; he penetrates into graveyards and perpetuates his memory alongside that of the numberless dead.

He never ventures abroad without his penknife. Whole hours are spent by him basking in the sun, leaning against some soft pine pillar, carving it down to suit his fancy, and gathering a little forest of chips about his feet. Large public buildings suit his purpose best. The city hall has always been a joy to his soul. Especially about the main entrances, where he is permitted to loiter, he has cut and engraved until the massive walls and doors look like ancient Egyptian tablets, a mass of illegible heiroglyphics. He complains because the old post office, once a rich field for his zeal, is now closed forever against his industrious fingers. But the various railway stations still afford him a hunting ground. The Northwestern and the Union depots, with their large and crowded waiting rooms, are particularly favorable to the cultivation of the practice. And the man with the penkuife habit is never caught. Apparently he works in the dead of night when all the world in broad daylight. He works as the ant works, persistently, laboriously, doing just a little each day. But the which he does to valuable prop-rty reaches the thousands.

It is hard to fling away the sentiment that once surrounded the lovers twain, the yielding sapling and the keen-edged knife. When Herman and Dorothea rise before our mental vision it is always under the noble oak tree, tanding together, and carving their names deep into the neart or the forest giant, to be an everlasting evidence of their everlasting love. Rosalind and Orlando in the forest of Arden carved true lovers' signs and ill-shaped hearts here, there and everywhere to lead their footsteps together. Coming down to fact and the end of the century, it is still the poetical practice of all the sentimental and romantic.

But there is no romance about the thoroughbred penknifer. He wants glory, and he spares no pains to obtain He works with the detailed interest and impressible persistency that proves the existence of one great predominating idea. Psychologists say that the penknife habit is allied to that universal human desire called notoriety. It is an offspring of the love for fame. Sometimes by accident the penknifer discovers himself abroad without his trusty lance in the hot pursuit for publicity, and he resorts to the pencil. Then he inscribes his name on painted walls, on pictures and in borrowed books to go thundering down the ages, an everlasting eyesore to posterity. Sometimes his weapon takes the form of a rubber stamp. Armed with that, he goes abroad and stabs at every available object within his reach. - Chicago Times-Herald.

THE FIRST BATTLE

THE FIRST BATTLE is an interesting story of the great political struggle of 1896, its most important events and the many issues involved; a logical treatise on Bi-metallism as uttered by eminent exponents, including the part taken by Hon. W. J. Bryan in the silver agitation prior to the Democratic National Convention, and during the campaign; the best examples of his wonderful oratory, the most noteworthy incidents of his famous tour, a careful review of the political siluation, a discussion of the election returns and the significance thereof, and the future possibilities of Bi-metallism as a political issue.
