THE CLONDYKE.

The story, or stories, of the wonderful richness of the Clondyke mines in Alaska read like fairy tales. Part of them perhaps are. It is undoubtedly true that remarkably rich ground has been found; it is perhaps equally true that the stories have not lost anything in the transmission. Alaska is a wonderfully rich mining country, but the history of all placer countries is that the gold is not distributed over vast areas in great quantities, but runs in streaks through the bars. It is fair to presume that this is the case on the Clondyke, and that the remarkably rich ground is, while compared to some camps, large, in reality but a small area. The field itself may be large, but the pay streak covers only a small portion of it.

This, of course, is a mere opinion based upon the history of mining camps in general. It may be possible the Clondyke has upset all previous theories, but it is not probable. "Cows far off wear long horns," and stories grow wonderfully by being transplanted. For instance, the story is told of one man who brought $65,000 in his grip sack and had "about all he could carry off the steamer." The average gold dust runs about $16 an ounce, and at this value the gentleman named had something over 260 pounds.

The country is hard to get into, and those who attempt it should have not less than $600 or $700 to start with. For the young man with energy and pluck and the required capital, Alaska offers fine inducements; but he must expect to experience many hardships, and he must not expect to shovel up gold with a scoop. A few do this, and of these you hear; but the accounts of the hundreds who wash pan after pan and do not get a color are not published in the newspapers. One out of fifty is a good average of successful miners. Give Alaska one out of three, or even one out of two, and it will be seen that he who goes has even chances of being disappointed. The miner who courts the fickle goddess Fortune understands this, and he who flirts with her will learn it, sooner or later, and perhaps sooner.

At present it looks as though the striking coal miners are going to win, the principal reason being that the scarcity of coal is closing up all factories. Another thing that makes success possible is that wages are so low that no outsiders are willing to work at the price, and the element of competition is shut out. The truth is, the price of coal has been too low, and the strike will be a good thing for the operators, as well as the miners. It is to be hoped the strike will win, even though it puts up the price of coal, for heretofore it has been sold at a price less than it could be mined and delivered for, and as the operators would not lose, the whole loss had to be borne by the starving miners.

The New York World grows virtuously indignant at the suggestion of annexing Hawaii, and says: "Almost all of its 109,000 people are leprosy and vicious serfs." It would be interesting reading to know why the World published that article, and how much the sugar trust paid for it. It can be safely set down that what the New York World opposes the people should have, and what it advocates the people should avoid as a pestilence. It also speaks of Montana, Idaho and Nevada as "rotten boroughs." We think now, and have so thought for many years, that the principal cause of kicking against the states named, is because it shut off the possibilities for appointive offices, and prevented New York and other Eastern states furnishing the officers for the territorial governments. Nevada, Montana and Idaho are able to take care of themselves as well as New York, and politically are much more honest.

Some things grow wearisome, and one of these is a notice of "the youngest Christian Endeavorer" visiting San Francisco. This is a girl of 4 years, about whom whole columns of type have been set. It is sweet to know that this brand has been plucked from the burning and repented of all the wickedness of her four sin-glutted years.

The Eugene Register has blossomed into a five-column daily. It is small, but, like most other infants, vigorous of lung.
