A DANGER SIGNAL.

The situation among the striking coal-miners becomes daily more desperate. Hunger has come to increase the bitterness of discontent, and close on the heels of hunger stalk riot and bloodshed. When the children cry for bread the father becomes an animal and the mother a demon. Carefully-collected statistics of the coal mining business show that the wages paid the coal-miner for a year average $176 a year, or about 48 cents a day, fully one-third of which must be paid for rent. This leaves for food and clothing for himself and family $120 a year, $10 a month.

Is it any wonder the toilers have struck? Is it strange that they refuse to work at the same wage? Is it not indeed a remarkable thing that murder and riot have not prevailed long ago? Americans are not slaves, and they will not go back to a life of hopeless toil, either, under the scourge of the employer's whip—starvation, or the armed force brought, as it will be brought, by the government to back the capitalist in his war on labor.

It is passing strange that the greed of gain so blinds the eyes of the rich that they cannot see the handwriting upon the wall; strange indeed that they will not understand that there is a limit beyond which wages cannot be reduced. They will learn the lesson some time, when it is written in letters of crimson upon the green hillsides, not before. No good citizen can view the situation without alarm, for behind such strikes, made by hopeless and desperate men, lurks social revolution. A spirit of fairness, a desire to meet the just and reasonable demands of the toilers would obviate this; but this spirit no longer exists among American employers.

An Englishman, writing to the Daily Mail (London) upon the probability of war between England and the United States suggests that the former country should take advantage of the situation to correct the Canadian boundary lines by annexing Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, thus giving Canada a seaport—Portland—which would be open all the year round. We suggest to our Democratic friends that this would be a good opportunity to get rid of a strong Republican district, yet at the same time we know that they would fight harder to prevent its loss than anyone. Bless their dear little innocent souls they are always complaining always finding fault, but as Senator Bruce's wife said to Charles Sumner when the latter defended the Negro, "Bless your soul, Marsa Sumner, if your face is white, your heart am as black as anybody's." The Democracy claim the sacred privilege of kicking their own dog, but will fight if anyone else takes a shy at it.

And still all the talk is "Clondyke." Many are going, many more longing, yet hesitating to go. California was the greatest gold field ever found. The conditions were peculiarly good for the miners on account of the mild climate, abundance of game and fish, and the fact that considerable wheat and vast herds of beef cattle were available. Add to this the fact that the ships of the world could reach the Golden Gate, and that transportation was easy, and it will be seen that the early arrivals there had little to contend with. Yet hundreds died of neglect and hunger, and the proportion who made money was less than one out of ten. Give the Clondyke double this rate, and its chances are five to one against every man who goes there. There will be hundreds longing for home and mother before the next summer solstice.

Massachusetts had a state board of arbitration for the settlement of labor strikes that has been maintained for eleven years. It has just issued a "bulletin" giving the statistics of strikes from 1886 to 1894, the record for 1895 and 1896 not having been made up. From 1886 to 1894, inclusive, there were 1,050 strikes and 63 lockouts reported, and throughout the whole period from 1886 to 1896 330 cases were submitted to the board for arbitration. Although the board dealt with a comparatively small number of the labor disputes, its record in these cases goes far to justify its creation and demonstrate its usefulness. Of 330 cases it settled 123, or more than one-third; 136 cases were settled by those concerned, and in only 71 cases was there no agreement effected.

If President McKinley intended recognizing labor by the appointment of Terrence V. Powderly, he made a serious mistake. Terrence labors only with his mouth.
