members of the party who had been with Prof. McClure that the searchers were soon able to reach the point on the side of the mountain directly underneath.

Daylight broke about 3:30, and the body of Prof. McClure was found lying on a great pile of boulders, forming a great, forbidding shelf.

Professor McClure's body fell a sheer 300 feet, and bounded about forty feet outward toward the edge of the cliff. It lay within twelve feet of the face of the mountain, and had it fallen over, would have dropped two or three miles, and in all probability would have disappeared into one of the huge crevasses which seam the mountain there.

Professor McClure carried a heavy roll of blankets and his barometer strapped upon his back. The barometer was broken, but all of his papers and notes of observation were found in his pockets intact.

That Teacher's Institute.

The normal institute is still "instituting" in The Dalles, but the teachers of the county haven't yet found out whether said institute was instituted under school laws governing county school institutes or whether it is an instituted institute to furnish remunerative employment during vacation to The Dalles pedagogues whose purses are more or less destitute.—Dufur Dispatch.

We fear the editor of the Dispatch, who is usually good-natured, has caught the Clondyke fever, got dyspepsia or some other nerve-upsetting trouble. In answer to the above, the second inquiry of the kind he has made, we will say that the "teachers' institute now instituting" was instituted under the school laws governing county school institutes. That law provides that such institute shall be held for not less than three days and no fees are charged teachers for attending it. We will say further that the payment of the $2.50 which the teachers have already paid is entirely optional with them. School Superintendent Gilbert, in the interest of the teachers, and because of a general request from them that he do so, arranged for holding four weeks' institute instead of one for three days. He gets nothing, of course, for his extra work, and the three teachers who have charge of the classes will be paid for their month's work about $34 each, $70 of which was contributed by the teachers and $32 being the amount in the institute fund. We will add further that those attending the institute are grateful for the opportunity given them to join these review classes, that cover the range of examinations, from life diplomas down, and all of them feel that the money they have contributed was well spent. We hope this explanation will mollify our good brother, and convince him that neither the county nor the teachers are being robbed.

So many men are leaving Skagit county that there is a fear of crippling the shingle industry in this county, as the manufacturers say they can't get enough men to keep the mills in operation. Even the farmers come to Mount Vernon daily looking for help to work in the hay fields.

T. M. Jones, a merchant of Cle-Elum, lost an arm Saturday night. He got on train No. 2 to see some relative away, and did not notice that the train was moving until it was well out into the yards. He then jumped, was dragged about 50 feet, and his left arm was crushed so as to render amputation necessary.

We just want to remark that if the Baker county quartz mines were in Alaska, or some other place 40,000 miles from nowhere, there would be a wild scramble among capitalists to buy. Men with money will back an entire stranger to go to the Clondyke, but to advance $50 towards developing a mine at home would break their hearts.

A team belonging to Mr. Gulliford ran away this afternoon. In their flight the horses ran on the sidewalk at the corner of the Vogt building and then without doing any damage turned up Federal street, soon taking opposite sides of a telephone pole and tearing loose from the wagon. The last seen of the horses they had each struck out on his own account.

It is only a question of time until this paper will have a fine item about someone's boy, who will be hauled home minus a leg or two, or a corpse, if the practice of jumping on the cars indulged in by the youngsters, is not stopped. Yesterday afternoon we saw two boys, aged about 12, jump on a caboose that was being pushed up Front street. The first boy got on all right, the other grasped the railing and jumped with both feet for the steps. His foot slipped and his feet struck the track, but he held on, the wheel just catching the point of his shoe. What parents need to do, whose boys indulge in this pastime, is to give them a practical illustration of a rear end collision with an athletic club.

The First Victims.

Some of the railroad boys who came up from Portland this morning tell of a fatal accident last night at the time the Elder sailed. She was advertised to leave at 7 o'clock, but did not cast loose from the wharf until about 11. By that time all Portland was on the wharves, in small boats and in steamers, crazy with excitement. It is estimated that fully 40,000 people were gathered to see the Elder off. Among these was a gentleman and two ladies in a small boat. A side-wheel steamer coming by, the man evidently got confused, and pulled the boat directly under one of the steamer's wheels. The whirling paddles crushed down on the party, killing both women and badly injuring the man. Our informant did not learn the names of these, the first Portland victims of the Clondyke craze.

Teachers' Examinations.

Notice is hereby given that for the purpose of making an examination of all persons who may offer themselves as candidates for teachers of the schools of this county, the county school superintendent thereof will hold a public examination at The Dalles, Oregon, beginning Wednesday, August 11th, at 1 o'clock p. m. PROF. M'CLURE KILLED.

Was With the Mazama Party on Mount Rainier.

A dispatch from Tacoma, July 29th, says:

Professor S. E. McClure, of Eugene, a member of the Mazamas' society that made the ascent of Mount Rainier Tuesday, lost his footing while descending the mountain Wednesday and fell 300 feet. He struck on a pile of rocks, and was instantly killed. His body was recovered several hours later by a searching party, and was brought to Tacoma tonight.

The Mazamas encamped in Paradise valley Monday, and about 30 of the party began the ascent to the peak that day, arriving at Gibraltar rock that night, where they camped. Early Wednesday morning Professor McClure, Professor Baillie, Professor Mitchell, of New York, and Dr. E. Dewitt Connell, of Portland, started ahead of the main party, and arrived at the mountain top about noon. Professor McClure carried a barometer for the purpose of taking observations on the top of mountain.

Returning, they met the remainder of the party near the summit, and arriving at Gibraltar rock, awaited their return.

They arrived at Camp Muir about 9:30 on their way to Paradise valley, and, soon after leaving that point, lost their way. The leader and the various members of the party began cautiously to search for the trail. The lights of the camp in Paradise valley were plainly visible, and, although it was a tramp of nearly four hours, the way to this camp had seemed so plain that nobody felt the least alarmed.

Professor McClure ventured toward the edge of a cliff, and announced that he saw a large pile of rocks a few hundred feet distant, and thought he had discovered the trail. Dr. Connell stood within 50 feet of him, keeping up a conversation, and attempting to direct his movements.

Darkness had fallen, and the only light came from the snow, which rendered the members of the party only half visible. Dr. Donnell says he had just answered Professor McClure's call, and was peering intently in another direction, when he heard a sudden crash, like the falling of rock. He looked in the direction where Professor McClure had stood a moment before, but he was not to be seen. He at once called to him, but received no response, and the members of the party then began a systematic search, but, failing to find McClure, concluded that he had fallen off the cliff.

It was nearly an hour before the trail to camp was found, and the members of the party, with the exception of Dr. Connell and a lady and gentleman from Oregon, started to come to report the accident.

A searching party was instantly organized, and, under the direction of Dr. Nunn of Portland, began the search for Prof. McClure's body. The place of the accident was so closely described by the
