INDIAN RAIN-MAKERS.

Crafty Red Men Who Adapt Their Efforts to the Weather.

All the Indian tribes had rain-makers, and some are yet left. This is one of their methods of operation, explains the New York Tribune. A large body of Crow Indians had gathered, all decked out in their best finery. Two elderly men retired a short distance and seemed to be mumbling to each other something like prayers or invocations; after some time a fire was made on the bank of the stream, when the two rain-makers gave an order and a young man plunged into the river, which was there very deep. When he came up, he had a blue catfish in his hand, which one of the old men took and threw into the fire, the tribe looking on in perfect silence. Then there was more numbling, accompanied by various contortions and gesticulations, when the gathering dispersed. It rained that night. Perhaps, on the whole, the Indian rain-maker is more generally successful than the civilized one occasionally appearing on the frontier in times of drought, the former having a shrewder and more experienced forecast of weather probabilities and putting in his incantations at the right

GIVES OFF LIGHT.

An Ever Active Glow Issues from a Recent Bit of Uranium. In a recent lecture before the Royal society Lord Kelvin vindicated the correctness of Volta's early theories in relation to contact electricity. He showed that when a zinc plate and a copper plate are brought into contact with one another and then separated one was charged with positive electricity and the other with negative. He further demonstrated that this was not due to oxidation by air or the moisture of the atmosphere, as is stated in the text-books of the day. Lord Kelvin exhibited other experiments illustrating electrification produced by means of dissimilar metals, and showed some curious properties possessed by urani-um. If a plate of this metal was connected with an electrometer and touched by a plate of aluminum positive electrification was produced, gradually changing past zero to negative. He also demonstrated that the rays given off by uranium in a dark room are a constant property of the substance and not a slow radiation of previously absorbed light, as has been claimed, but he could offer no solution of the mysterious action of this metal.
