A FOREIGN STRIKE.

The strike in the coal mining regions serves to show the variegated nature of American citizenship. The strike is not an American institution, nor is it one that Americans take to kindly. Most native-born citizens have been educated in the doctrine that an American laborer can work at any job he can secure, and can quit whenever and wherever he likes. He has been taught that the employer may hire whom he pleases, when he pleases, and pay such wages as he pleases, and can discharge his employes when he sees fit to do so. That the man with labor to sell cannot force any one to buy it, and the man with money to buy labor with cannot compel any one to work for him. That, in fact, capital and labor are on an equal footing with regard to their rights and liberties.

The strike in the coal mines is not an American strike, but a foreign one, most of the coal miners being Hungarians and Slavs. They were imported by the coal operators, some of them in violation of law, for the reason that their labor was cheap, and there are few, if any, of them now striking but that are receiving better wages than they did before they came to America. The trouble is that they have forced the wages of the American miner down to a point where he cannot exist on them.

The strike so far has been free from bloodshed, and it is possible that it may be ended without it, but not probable. There is a vast element of uneducated men, mostly of foreign birth, engaged in the strike; men who understand not American laws or the principle of American government, and from these the trouble will come. The strike, though, shows a vast number of men, the larger portion of whom cannot speak the English language, carrying on a fight with American mine owners.

HOPE'S STAR IN THE WEST.

Hope's star is rising in the West; to the discredited, vilified and lamed West the East turns its expectant and hopeful gaze. "The demand for freight cars on western roads is still larger than the supply," says a New York daily. "They are wanted to bring East the prosperity which has not been supplied from Washington."

All the hopeful, cheery talk now heard in eastern financial centers turns around the great things the West is expected to do for the country. The West is to yield enough gold for the wants of the people; the West is to blockade the railroads with its abundant crops, and thus enable the carriers to show increased earnings; the West is to send in big orders for manufactured goods, and thus set the idle mills a-running; the West is to provide new and profitable openings for idle and timid capital, and give labor and wages to the unemployed.

It is well that the country has put away the delusion that prosperity must come from above and filter down among the people; that the way to bring back prosperity was to coax the men holding the strong boxes to bring out their money and lead it to the farmers and manufacturers. That way prosperity would never have been found.

Prosperity starts from below and works upward. It begins with the farmer, extends from the farmer to the country dealer, from the country dealer to the city merchant, and from the city merchant to the manufacturer. It has no other course.—Spokesman-Review.

The present dynasty in Spain has two sets of enemies, the Carlists and the Republicans, but neither of them is very formidable at this time. Americans would be glad to see a republic established in Spain, and in every other monarchical country, but the chances for a republic in Spain are shadowy. The Republican experiment in that country a quarter of a century ago did not turn out happily, although it did as well as any reasonable person had a right to expect. The masses of the Spanish people had neither the education nor the training which would have fitted them for self government, nor have they now. Of course a double rebellion, or an uprising of the Republicans and Carlists simultaneously, under able leaders, would be a serious menace to the present unpopular house. But the Republicans never had able leaders, though they had an abundance of good talkers and writers. In the matter of leadership the Carlists have always been poorly equipped, except during their first rising two-thirds of a century ago.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Remarkable Cure of Chronic Diarrhoea.

In 1862, when I served my country as a private in Company A, 167th Pennsylvania Volunteers, I contracted chronic diarrhoea. It has given me great deal of trouble ever since. I have tried a dozen different medicines and several prominent doctors without any permanent relief. Not long ago a friend sent me a sample bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and after that I bought and took a 50 cent bottle; and now I can say that I am entirely cured. I cannot be thankful enough to you for this great Remedy, and recommend it to all suffering veterans. If in doubt write to me. Yours gratefully, Henry Steinberger, Allentown, Pa. Sold by Blakeley & Houghton.
