A POPULAR FALLACY .-

Fall in Temperature of Ocean Does Not Indicate Presence of Ice.

For many years an opinion existed among scamen and others that a fall in the sea-surface temperature implied nearness of ice. Nothing, says the Nautical Magazine, can be more remote from the truth, though shore folk still perpetuate this fiction in books and newspapers. A sudden fall in seasurface temperature is likely near the Agulhas, the Japanese current, the gulf strenm, while running the Easting down in the South Indian ocean, in the South Atlantic about 40 degrees south, 40 degrees west, and elsewhere; and this, whether icebergs be near or hundreds of miles away. Capt. S. T. S. Lecky, R. N. R., to whom the nautical profession is indebted for his "Wrinkles in Practical Navigation," was probably the first to draw the attention of his brethren to this fact. In the ninth edition of his book he points out that "allied to fog is the question of danger from ice. It is a popular delusion among passengers on board ship that, by taking the temperature of the water at short intervals, the approach to ice is unfailingly indicated. Unfortunately such is by no means the fact, and it is time the idea was exploded. More than ordinarily cold water merely shows that the ship is in a part of the ocean where ice may possibly be encountered, and not that it is accordly present." Shipmasters of repute freely confess, with Capt. Evans, of the Tainui, that they have "never found sea temperature fall lower when near ice than when several miles away' from the danger.

A Showman Who Was Willing to Do More Than Most Would Do. "I always strive to please," remarked the dramatic editor, as he scratched the words "big thing" out of the advance notice he was writing and substituted 'megatherian aggregation."

"Thanks, I am sure," said the advance agent, as he read over the ten lines the dramatic critic was giving him, and carefully put back into his pocket the half-column notice he had first drawn on the d. c.

"I presume," smiled the d. c., "that you always strive to please, too, don't you?"

"Not always," in a semidisappointed tone, "but I used to have a friend who did. He really was the most self-denying chap I ever saw, and what he wouldn't do to please an audience wasn't worth doing."

"Where is he now?" "Dead."

"Dead?

'Yes, it killed him. It was this way: Miss Mary Fraser came up from Port-land a few days ago, and is the guest of Mrs. C. J. Crandall in nearly every river tributary to the Mississippi. He had been the origin-Mrs. Minnie Gleason and two little ator of the fireworks feature at this seems are up from Portland visiting her place, and his phenomenal success had place, and his phenomenal success had made him so proud that he would sooner have died than had a failure. There were ten times as many people there that night as there had ever been, and my friend was feeling so good you could see it in his walk.

Everybody was on edge, too, for the grand blaze of glory the management had been advertising for weeks, and when, promptly at the hour of ten o'clock, my friend strutted forth like a peacock to set off the great display with his own hand there was a round of applause, followed by a dead silence as the audience sat breathless watch ing for the burst of blazing glory. But somehow it didn't burst. The professor fired the train and retreated to a safe place, but the powder wouldn't burn. It fizzled and went out, instead Once, twice, thrice, it fizzled, sputtered and went out, and then the crowd began to growl and guy, as crowds always will, and the professor began to get wild.

"Several other attempts to set the piece off were no more successful, and at last, with a smothered scream of crazy rage, he shot up the ladder of the tower to its very top, where he had a platform stered with all sorts of inflammable and explosive things, arranged to go off at the proper time. He stood there a moment silhouetted against the sky, the crowd indulging in gibes and jeers, with now and then a threat as to what he might expect if he would only come down to the ground. This was his time to show what he could do to please his audience. and in a minute, and before anybody had any idea what he would do next, he caught up an armful of the explosives about him, fastened them to his clothes, and hung wreaths and rings over his neck and shoulders, and setting the whole thing afire, he swung out into the air in the balloon, which was already tugging at its anchor.

"As the balloon shot up, it was a terrific sight, and the poor devil's shricks to the intensity of the scene, al ready lurid with red and blue lights, while the air was filled with all manner of bursting bombs and crashing explosives. Women fainted, men ran helplessly about shouting, and still the balloon swept upward with its fiery freight and passenger, until when it feet above the earth, it caught fire and the whole burning mass shot like blazing ball straight to the ground. "You will be safe in betting those people never saw such an exhibition as that before, nor will ever again in all probability, and when it was over," concluded the agent, "the audience seemed to realize what the professor had done to please them, and they chipped in and built him a monument where he fell, having on it, besides his name and the cept 'He Strived to Please.' ' The dramatic critic was at least half a minute in recovering his speech after the recital of this remarkable tale, and before he could ask any questions the advance agent had folded his tent like a circus and stolen away to the office of the next dramatic critic he had to call EAST SECOND STREET. upon.-Washington Star.
