EVENT IN MUNICIPAL POLITICS.

The municipal situation in New York is most interesting. The time is approaching when the first mayor of Greater New York is to be chosen. All political organizations are deeply worked up over the prospect presented by the consolidation of New York and Brooklyn's municipal affairs. Probably no position in the country outside the presidency gives such opportunity for patronage and the resultant influence as does the mayoralty of America's mammoth city, and either local organization would gladly sacrifice anything it had if this rich plum could be caught as it fell. The Tammany machine and the Platt push have been looking forward with greedy eyes to the ripening of the fruit and reveling in the rich eating it would make; but an indication of frost has appeared, which bids fair to blast all their hopes.

A movement on the part of prominent citizens, mostly of Republican belief, but independent in municipal concerns, has been started looking towards the nomination and election of Seth Low, the president of Columbia college, as mayor. Mr. Low already served as chief executive of Brooklyn and made a record never surpassed before or since. So when the movement for better municipal government started, all eyes turned naturally to him as the one best fitted to lead so important a contest. When the agitation began the machine leaders of both parties laughed at what seemed a futile effort, but recent events have caused them to think deeper and more anxiously. The method adopted for securing the nomination of President Low was a great innovation. The Citizens' Union asked voters to pledge themselves for Mr. Low, and one hundred and sixteen thousand have done so. The regular parties are astounded and frightened by this amazing expression of public opinion. The Tammany leaders are retiring from business; Croker declares he is out of the control of Tammany; that the active members, Sheenan and the rest, must be responsible for its management, and that England is good enough for him.

The Republican [machine] leaders are equally disturbed. They do not understand this new way of making nominations, and are disturbed by it. At first they demanded that the "Citizens" should not hold their convention till after the Republican convention, and now they beg that an "anti-Tammany" convention be held on the same day. It is likely that the Republicans will endorse the nomination of Mr. Low, and if so Greater New York is assured a clean economical administration during his term of office.

The struggle will be watched with exceeding interest by all cities which are tired of municipal misrule.

The feelings of everyone are grieved at the news which came yesterday from the Klondike. Few, if any, are surprised at the stories of distress and impending disaster which hangs over the hardy adventurers who have braved the Arctic snows in quest of precious gold. It is hard to blame them for going, since the prize was tempting, but it seems that the fears of the most incredulous will be justified. The steamer Cleveland brings news of imminent starvation at Dawson City. The stores which heretofore have supplied the needs of the miners are closed, their stocks depleted and shelves empty, with the means of replenishment gone. The Yukon is beginning to show signs of the approaching freeze, while the mountain passes are becoming every day more impassable. Viewed in sober judgment the situation is perilous for the four or five thousand men gathered around Dawson City, and the situation seems such as to call for government aid. With proper equipment, and spurred by the thought of rescue, a government expedition would accomplish more than any other agency in bringing relief to the winter-bound miners. Undoubtedly should these first reports be verified the administration will give prompt attention to the exigencies of the hour. The worst part of the whole matter is that there will be no distinction between forethought and recklessness. The man who went supplied with a year's provision will be compelled to divide them with those who started blindly improvident, and in many cases such transfer will be made amid circumstances of violence.

Wheat sold yesterday in Chicago for 98 cents; in Portland 88 and 90, and in The Dalles 80 cents per bushel. The ordinary observer there would seem too much difference in these quotations. Chicago ships most of its wheat to New York, while Portland, which is on the seaboard and ships direct to Liverpool, is eight cents below the Chicago price. While naturally there should be some variation, it does not seem that geographical conditions justify so much as there is. Another thing that is puzzling is the difference between the quotations in Portland and in The Dalles. With the opening of the locks it was hoped that the variation between these two points would be nearly nominal, but there is little, if any, change from last year.
