FRANCO-RUSSIAN ALLIANCE.

the chain Russia is binding about ever known. Europe to insure peace and freedom for herself to carry out her great plans. . That the people, however, especially while the contents of the treaty are as yet unknown, should be so extravagantly enthusiastic over it, shows that they suppose it to be something more than an ordinary arrangement between the two governments, and understand it to secure some great advantage to them as peoples.

The advantage which the French hope to secure is very evident. They have felt and still feel that France has not only lost an important and integral part of her territory, and that she can never be her true self Alsace and Lorraine are restored, but that so long as the present frontier remains she will be at the mercy of Germany. They look upon Russia as the only power that can assist them to recover that lost territory and regain the prestige which a well-defined frontier can give. In this alliance they see the first gleam of hope which they have had since Sedan, and the very chance makes them delirious. The advantage which the Russians expect to gain is very different. The Russian is an ardent Pan-Slavist, believes devotedly in the great future of the Slavic peoples, and dreams of an empire the greatest that the [world has ever known. In the practical development of that idea, however, he constantly finds himself encountering two obstacles, England and Germany, or perhaps better, Englishmen and Germans, Wherever he reaches out his hand to secure an opening for trade into the open sea, there he finds an English fleet. English forts block every access to India, which every Russian feels must come to him. If he wants, to fraternize with other branches of the eastern church, English treaties and diplomacy are in the way. Most of all, he feels that he would have been in Constantinople long ere this, but for the English fleets at Besika Bay. Consequently he hates England. As for the Germans, are they not in every Russian city, monopolizing Russian trade, displacing Russian artisans, teaching Russian schools, preaching a non-Russian religion? Wherever he turns he sees Germans, and he devoutly wishes that he could find some means of repressing if not suppressing them, France he knows, or thinks, hates both as cordially as he does; and although he does not, perhaps, see just how, he yet feels that the alliance is going to strengthen bim against them.

There is another element which probably, has some influence. There is a certain sympathy of temperament between . the French and Russians, and a corresponding antago- truits, bearing trees, new house of six nism between both and the Saxon rooms, barns, outbuildings, etc., all new; races. tense in their feeling, but not carried away by impulse. The French and Russians are easily wrought up to a high pitch of excitement and fervor. This is manifest in the types of socialism in each country. There is an abandon about the French anarchist and the Russian nihilist which is the very reverse of the calculating coolness of Karl Marx and Tom

What gives most seriousness to the Franco-Russian alliance is the possibility or the danger that the two peoples may force the action of their governments. OLD-TIME SWEETNESS GONE. Holasses Is Now Made Into Rum, and

Brown Sugar Can't Be Bought. The old-fashioned molasses is raplly disappearing as an article of comnerce,", said a prominent grocer, reports the Eastport (Me.) Sentinel, "and n its place have come a number of sirps, which are more costly, and by no he little ones, who delight, as we did then we were young, in having 'lasses on their bread. Most of the molasses roes into the distilleries, where it is nade into rum, for which, notwithlanding the efforts of our temperance orkers, the demand is constantly on he increase, especially in the New Engand states and for the export trade. The regular drinker of rum will take o other liquors in its place if he can help it. It seems to reach the spot wore directly than any other dram. The darker brown sugars have also disppeared, and they are not likely to reirn, owing to the methods of boiling ad the manufacture. Granulated ugar is of the same composition, as ar as the saccharine qualities are conerned, as loaf cut, loaf cube and ushed, and differs only from them in ent its crystals do not cohere. This because it is constantly stirred durg the process of crystallization. The liter brown sugars taste sweeter than ie white, for the reason that there is me molasses in them. Housekeep is have difficulty in these days in find g coarse, dark sugars, which are alays preferred for use in putting up weet pickles, making cakes, and simer uses. As they cannot get brown gar any more, it may be well for them remember that they can simulate rown sugar by adding a teaspoonful of classes to each quarter of a pound of he white granulated sugar. This comication does as well in all household receipts that call for brown sugar as he article itself, and, besides, it saves ham a great deal of hunting for brown ugar, which, as said before, has dis-
