SPEAKER REED ON HARD TIMES

Breadth of view and a far-reaching philosophy mark an article written by Speaker Thomas B. Reed on recurring periods of business depression. His method is not to examine the features of one such season, but to take it in relation to the repeated ebb and flow in the tide of industry and commerce. He finds in history a clear defined alternation of good times and hard times, and in regard to the latter is disposed to believe with one of Shakespeare's English kings, that "There is some soul of goodness in things evil would men observingly distill it out." Mr. Reed argues that as long as nature remains unchanged waves of prosperity must come and recede. Man, kind is averse to monotony, and needs periodically a time for following. "Were the continuance of the feeling of confidence prolonged, unbroken, for even a single century," says the speaker, "I am persuaded that all the wealth of the world would be dissipated, and we should be as naked as Adam and Eve came into the world." If the United States reaches a higher prosperity than other nations it feels more than others the running of business currents in the contrary direction.

When times are flush in America, as Mr. Reed views the case, the people are wasteful with their abundance, and spend capital which they mistake for income. Presently a general settlement is demanded, a liquidation of debt. This is a complex operation the world over, and it takes time to tell who owns the property. As the source of profits grows narrower the greatest ingenuity is applied to reduce the cost of conducting business. Production in mills and factories is made cheaper, freight cars are enlarged into "small barns," and locomotives are carried forward and are an element in the next season good times. In general the drift is toward higher prosperity and civilization.

Mr. Reed makes no reference to the political aspect of the case, but he could write interestingly and instructively on the extent to which hard times can be tempered by the intelligent and unremitting attention of the people to public affairs. If prosperity runs into wild speculation that should be checked, and there should be no waste even when the horn of plenty is overflowing. In periods of liquidation a spirit of political recklessness lurks at the door, and the demagogue finds listeners for his cant and fallacies at every street corner. We had prosperity in 1892, and it was lost through inattention to political duty. The last five years have not made up an era of depression in other countries. British revenues, for instance, have been favorable and the surplus unusually large. Our latest visitation of hard times was largely political in its origin, and was therefore largely preventible.—Statesman.

It can easily be seen that the men who decided to wait till the spring opening of the Yukon before attempting to reach the Klondike, had the calmest judgment. This mad rush for the frozen gold fields has never an equal in the history of mining, and emphasizes how grinding the times have been the last four years. Men who had lost property and employment through the closing of industries and shrinkage of values, were willing to risk their personal comfort and hold life at a cheap figure if only they could obtain a portion of the hidden wealth. What disappointments are in store, time alone can tell, though even now they are easily pictured. Where one strikes it, ten will miss, and many a haggard face will tell of deep-seated care and worry after wealth. At the very best, the conditions are of relentless severity, and with the prospect of food being scarce at Dawson, the situation is alarming. All reports confirm the possible famine, and those whose friends are trudging the weary pass will well hope that they will turn back to the coast, where at least relief can reach them.

The Oregonian is determined to make a martyr out of President Andrews by abusing him at every turn. Such continued tirading is unseemly. The man has committed no crime, and his case, although an important one as illustrating the general principle of free speech, has received notice enough from the public, and should be allowed to rest.

A Fine School.
St. Mary's academy for ladies, located in this city and under the direction of the Sisters, is one of the best educational institutions on the coast. The building is of brick, large and well ventilated. Besides the regular studies, especial effort is made to instill into the minds of the pupils a desire to form their hearts to virtue, and to fit them to be true and noble women. Gratuitous lessons are given in all kinds of plain and fancy needle work, knitting, embroidery, etc. Pupils will receive the same watchful care that would be given them by conscientious parents. It is in fact an ideal school and a pleasant home. Those who have girls to send to school should write to St. Mary's academy for terms. tf.
