OREGON'S MINES.

Time immemorial men have gone wild in the pursuit of gold. When Solomon's ships came back from Ophir with their golden freight, though sacred history does not chronicle the fact, there was undoubtedly a big rush across the Dyea pass of those days for the new gold fields. Jason went in search of the golden fleece, not on account of the wool, but of its quality. Jupiter penetrated the cave wherein Danae, the beautiful, was imprisoned in the shape of a shower of gold-dust. In modern days California, Australia, South Africa have all set the world gold crazy, and the present rush to the Klondike probably exceeds them all, for the reason that the yellow metal lays within the domain of the ice king. Human ingenuity and endurance are taxed to wrest from the grasp of the ice king the yellow treasure, and yet while the wild tales of wonderful treasures sets the blood tingling, the capitalists of Oregon, at least, pass over and by mining possibilities which, properly developed, would start a bigger and wilder rush than the Yukon can boast of.

In Baker and Grant counties is fabulous wealth. Their mountains are teeming with the precious metal, yet from Baker county have gone dozens, perhaps, to the unknown Yukon, to wrestle with the hardships of an Arctic winter. The Yukon is undoubtedly rich in gold, yet we venture the assertion that inside of ten years Baker and Grant counties will produce more gold than Alaska; more gold than Colorado, California, Australia or Africa. They will produce more gold in a month than Rossland will show in ten years, and yet Oregon capital, and particularly Portland capital, is blind to its opportunities and goes wooing the frosty goddess of fortune who dwells within the Arctic circle. With a half dozen little mills the counties named are now producing $2,000,000 a year, and yet the mines are not even prospected.

The North Pole mine recently developed a pay streak eight inches wide that is worth $12,000 a ton. Telluride, worth $50,000 a ton, has been found in another mine; and yet while column after column of the Portland papers are filled with Klondike stories, a half-inch telegram suffices for the tale of Oregon's wealth. Colorado and eastern capitalists are buying up the mines, and the wealth of Oregon's mines goes out of the state. 'Tis true, 'tis pity. Pity 'tis, 'tis true.

The Prineville Review is inclined to say that the visit of Major Coville, a commissioner from the interior department, inspecting the forest reservation, will be beneficial. Heretofore the examination has been made in Portland or at some foreign port. A personal examination is just what the stockmen wanted. They feel that an unbiased examination by an unbiased man will substantiate the position taken by them that moderate grazing does not injure the timber growth. This could never be drilled into the cranium of any one seated in some palatial office hundreds of miles from the scene of the pretended examination.

Some of our Democratic exchanges are finding fault with the improved business conditions by saying that McKinley and Republican victory at the polls last year had nothing to do with it. That may be true, but the fact that business is improved exists just the same. It is quite proper that the people of America should render unto McKinley the things that are McKinley's, and unto God the things that are God's. The trouble with our Democratic contemporaries is that they deny one without giving credit to the other.

An eastern man has discovered a new means of killing rats. He cuts cork in small pieces and mingles it with a food of peculiar attraction to the rats, but which at the same time causes a raging thirst. The rats eat the cork, drink water, and burst from the swelling of the corks.

Reports from Argentina are to the effect that the wheat prospect is good, and that 1,500,000 tons will be available for shipment. As the harvest does not begin until January, the guessing is somewhat premature. Similar reports come from Australia.
