NOT CREDULOUS.

The Oregonian thinks THE CHRONICLE "credulous," or that "The Chronicle thinks the people too credulous," because it suggested that it would not be a bad thing to retain Mr. T. J. Black as collector of customs. We fail to discover from whence the Oregonian derives its inferences. We did not say he would be, but that should be retained.

The Oregonian then proceeds to turn the subject into the channel of "Mitchell Republicanism" and to point out that the "Mitchell push" are determined to send that gentleman back to Washington at all hazards. Admit this for the sake of argument, and then what does the Oregonian and the Corbett Republicans purpose doing? To use its own language, put a Corbett Republican in Black's place, whose efforts will be devoted to further corruption of the Republican party. The Oregonian nor the Corbett Republicans are infatuated with Geer. He is simply the most available instrument convenient to do their work. They do not want Geer in the office, because they could not use him there; but he is an available candidate for them to fight what they are pleased to call the Mitchell Republicans with.

The Oregonian is like a rattlesnake in August, blind to everything except its ability to strike without warning, and cognizant of the increased power of its venom. It has gone wild on the silver question, and is about the only Republican newspaper (if it can be classed as such) but that knows the silver question is dead beyond the hope of redemption. The editor of the Oregonian knows that upon the adoption of the St. Louis platform John H. Mitchell acquiesced in the demands of his party and made dozens of speeches during the campaign in every one of which he indorsed the national Republican platform. The Oregonian uses the silver question as a bug-a-boo, but it neither frightens nor deceives anyone. The people have not yet forgotten the Oregonian's indorsement of Jonathan Bourne and the free silver Populist faction at Salem last winter, that made Mitchell's defeat and the appointment of a "sound money" man, Mr. Corbett, possible? Is it these "sound money" friends of Mr. Corbett who now demand Geer, even at the risk of disrupting the Republican party? Is it these sound money men—the Barclays, the U'Rens, the Bournes—who stood so firmly behind Corbett, because, perhaps, his money was sound, who now demand the appointment of Mr. Geer? who pour their sound money complaints into the ears of the Oregonian, and pull the bed-clothes over their trembling heads at the mention of the ghost of silver? It would seem so. "Here is a question on which earnest men will not be juggled with" indeed, and the cry of Mitchell and free silver, albeit coming from the point of vantage of the Oregonian tower, will not deceive nor delude the honest men who compose the rank and file of the Republican party.

We have the profoundest admiration for Mr. Geer, but being a good Republican he should accept the decision of the Oregon delegation, of whom, unfortunately, Mr. Mitchell is not one, as made in the interests of the party. We are credulous enough to believe this, but we are not credulous enough to believe that the Oregonian cares two whoops in Sheol who is collector of customs, so long as the office furnishes it a club with which to strike Mitchell.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

The destruction of property by fire has always something of the pathetic about it, no matter how rich the owner may be, or how little the loss may affect him. Property is but the accumulation of labor. A house represents so many days hard work, and its destruction is an absolute loss of so much of the world's labor. Such a loss as visited Pendleton yesterday is a calamity. The accumulations made possible by the energy, thrift, industry and foresight of an honest and honorable man, have vanished in an hour, $150,000 in value going up in smoke.

The mill will probably be re-built, and a finer structure and more perfect plant may be put in its place, but the patient years that Mr. Byers has expended in perfecting his plant and building up his business cannot be restored to him. He must commence again, in his old age, as such men as he do commence, hopefully and manfully, to repair as best he can his injured fortunes. Luckily he had insurance enough on the plant to assist him materially in re-building; but the loss is a severe blow just the same.
