CHANGING CONDITIONS.

The great Northwest is entering upon another epoch in its creative history. The pioneer has done his work; the trackless forest, which sixty years ago heard the sound of the axe for the first time, has been transformed into smiling farms and happy homes; cities and towns have sprung where in the memory of but two generations the improvident savage roamed at will and hunted his prey. Little dreaming of the changes soon to follow; railroads have penetrated into the heart of the country, causing civilization and progress to follow its narrow trail; where once lay broad prairies, undisturbed save by the morning wind as it swayed the luxuriant grass, now are myriad grain fields, while the broad rivers, on whose waters but a little while ago the Indian's canoe glided peacefully, now support on their white bosoms the carryings of a mighty commerce. All former conditions have changed, and all according to natural laws. A new race of men, surrounded by different conditions, now occupy the place of the brave Oregon pioneers; the destiny of the one has been accomplished, the fate of the other remains to be determined.

In former years the people of Oregon depended solely upon natural conditions, which, with ordinary efforts, yielded rich returns. Wheat and wool, stock and lumber, and all kinds of natural products grew in great abundance, and finding ready sale in the markets of the world, brought rich returns to the people of the Northwest. The land waxed fat, and a golden stream of wealth poured continually into its lap.

But the opening of new countries and the general progress and advancing civilization have brought about new conditions. No longer can we depend altogether upon advantage of situation, richness of soil and mildness of climate. Competition in every line of business is at fearful strain; the margins of profits in all lines of trade are smaller than in former years, and it is push and well-directed management which gives to one superiority over another. Oregon and Washington are settling down to a permanent basis. The lines are being drawn which succeeding years will make all the more marked. The Northwest as a whole will grow in strength and richness as the years go on because it has the resources and the men to develop them; but it remains to be seen what portions pass one another in the fight. It does not follow that because one town was larger and more prosperous than its neighbor in former years that it will always remain so. History often teaches the reverse, and examples of this sort are seen in the experience of every one. No city can depend altogether upon past prosperity without making an effort for its continuation.

We lay an interest in the general growth of the Northwest, but a particular one in the progress of The Dalles. This is our first concern, and it is for this that THE CHRONICLE will always labor in the future as it has done in the past. The truth is self evident that this is the year in which The Dalles must determine its future status. Other towns are awake to that fact as regards themselves, and many of them are laying a firm basis for prosperity. The Dalles has better advantages than any of them, but we are not showing the same spirit of enterprise.

Can any intelligent person give an adequate explanation of why there should be woolen and scouring mills running night and day at Pendleton and none at The Dalles? or why Salem, Oregon City, Albany and Dallas should all have woolen mills running on full capacity and The Dalles none? or why La Grande should be selected as the place to experiment in making beet sugar, and The Dalles passed by? There is no explanation save that we have been dilatory in developing the natural resources that God gave us. Instead of a population numbering 5000, The Dalles should contain 15,000, and would do so yet if industries with pay rolls were started.

Now is the time to look the matter square in the face. The capital can be found; water power exists in unlimited quantities; the natural products are here in greater profusion than anywhere else in the state, and the brains to direct and carry on these undertakings are here, if only backed with the necessary nerve and energy. To establish manufacturing industries in The Dalles should be the hope and ambition of every citizen.

ELY'S CREAM BALM is a positive cure. Apply into the nostrils. It is quickly absorbed. 60 cents at Druggists or by mail; samples 15c. by mail. ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York City.

To Butter Makers.

I have one of the new improved Electric Churns and can do the churning in one to two minutes. I can recommend it to any one. The first day I got mine I sold three; next day six; one day eleven. Every churn sold sells another. I cleared $182 in 36 days. To show it, to make a sale. I advise any one wishing a churn or a good paying business of their own to write to the U. S. Novelty Mfg. Co., 1517 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Married ladies should see Dr. Mullinix. They will learn something that they have always wanted to know.
