FRIDAY - - - OCTOBER 8, 1897
MAKE THE FAIR A SUCCESS.

The business men of The Dalles can make no mistake in lending to the district fair their hearty support. Walla Walla has just concluded a most successful fruit exhibition, and is now getting ready for one of the largest agricultural fairs and race meetings ever held in Eastern Washington. In a year like this there should be no difficulty in attracting a large number of visitors and giving them the means of making their visit one of enjoyment.

In the last few years the fair at The Dalles has been held under inauspicious circumstances. The farmers have not felt in the best of spirits and did not feel possessed of the inclination to enter into any festivities. This year they are all happy and in just the humor for taking part in the general rejoicing. There promises to be a large attendance from the surrounding country, and with the guarantee which our liberal citizens have furnished there will be no lack of good horses to make interesting contests.

The best feature should be the exhibits in the pavilion. Wasco county is famed the country over for the excellence of its fruit products. There should be an abundance of display this year. Our merchants should see to it that the pavilion is crowded with exhibits. No better opportunity of advertisement for their goods and wares can be found than is presented by this exhibition. Let us show to the people who visit our city next week that The Dalles can supply everything needful for the wants of the interior country.

The fair is no money-making concern, but when supported in the proper spirit is a source of enjoyment and mutual profit to all who take part. "By your fruits shall ye be known," and when judged by such a standard this community can attain the highest reputation.

Let everyone make it a personal matter, and the coming fair meeting will be an indication of the wealth and progress of this section of Eastern Oregon.

The Commercial Association of Pendleton, an institution which corresponds to the Commercial Club of this place, has held a meeting and adopted resolutions asking insurance companies to make as prompt payment as possible, of the losses sustained by Mr. Byers, the owner of the Pendleton Flouring Mills, recently burned. This, while a little thing in itself, shows that Pendleton has the right idea of municipal growth. United action for the common good is what makes a town. In this age nothing else will do it. The temporary victory of one faction over another does the great mass of people no good, and results only in mutual jealousies, back-biting and the inertia of the community. When the panic of '93 struck Seattle, all the banks pledged each other mutual support, and agreed to swim or sink together. As a result, not a banking institution in Seattle failed; a condition which no city of like importance on the coast was able to realize. Seattle's sustained growth since that time fully justifies the theory upon which its citizens depended.

We hardly suppose there is a person who, claiming residence in The Dalles, rides from Portland to Salem on the railroad and views the woolen mills at Oregon City and then at Salem without thinking deep down in his heart of the strange anomaly which The Dalles presents. The largest wool shipping point in the United States having to send its wool to neighboring towns, and then buying it back in manufactured form. Where there is one reason for a woolen mill at Salem, there are five why there should be such a factory at The Dalles. Albany, Oregon City, Pendleton and Dallas, none of them can point to the natural advantages as The Dalles has, yet each of these places have gone ahead and established woolen industries, which are a source of pride and profit to its citizens. Now is the time to take advantage of the improving conditions; time flies faster than we think.
