CHARLES A. DANA.

The death of Charles A. Dana removes one of the ablest journalists of the day. He was an advanced representative of the journalists now two generations past, and has wielded a powerful and healthful influence in moulding public sentiment for more than half a century. Entering the office of the New York Tribune in 1847, he became a willing co-worker with Horace Greeley and valiantly supported the measures which led to the formation of the Republican party. After fifteen years of service on the Tribune, he retired and was appointed assistant secretary of war, under Secretary Stanton which he held until after the surrender of General Lee. During the war he rendered efficient and valuable services to the department, in his tours of inspection of the condition of the army and its movements under the various commanders. His reports were highly appreciated by the department and had much influence with the president and Secretary Stanton. He early recognized General Grant's abilities as a military commander and rendered him his strong support, which, no doubt, did much to direct the attention of the president and his war secretary to him as the proper commander-in-chief of the armies in the field.

After the close of the war Mr. Dana resumed his journalistic career and after a short editorial service in Chicago he returned to New York and in 1867 organized the stock company which now owns the New York Sun, and on the 29th day of January the first number, under his editorial management, was given to the public. Ever since then, until death called him from his labors, he was actively engaged in the management of that great newspaper.

Mr. Dana had great literary abilities, but it is through the New York Sun that he is noted and best known to the present generation. In the conduct of his great journal he was the sole responsible editor and controlling manager. He infused into its columns his marked individuality. His sterling integrity to principles, he never forsook; and hence the Sun never descended to the use of the sensational journalism which is so discreditable to the papers of the day. Honest government, whether national or municipal, found in Charles A. Dana a conscientious and firm advocate for the right. A giant in intellect, he infused his own personality into his advocacy of reforms, as well as in his political policies. On national matters he was intensely American, and was ever a defender of the oppressed. The press has lost one of its greatest and brightest members, and the public an honest and clean journalist, whose chair will be difficult to fill.—Walla Walla Union.

The reported disagreement in the Leutger trial illustrates again the maxim that the state needs twelve jurors, while the defense requires but one. A disagreement as to the outcome is to be regretted. A verdict one way or the other would be far more satisfactory to the public mind and obviate the necessity of another expensive trial. Leutger and Durrant would be a strong card in a traveling aggregation.

It is becoming every day more evident that if the friends of good government in New York wish to down Tammany, either Low or Tracy must be withdrawn in the candidacy for mayor. As the Citizens' Union ticket, upon which Low is making his canvas, was the first in the field, and as it is clearly shown Tracy is the weakest candidate, his is the name which should be withdrawn. The moral fiber of New York's citizens is undergoing a test, and the effect of the forthcoming election will be felt outside the locality to which it particularly pertains.
