PHOTOGRAPHERS AND DUST.

How It Affects Their Plates and What They Do to Escape It.

Among the many evils which are attributed to the all-pervading, never-to-be-escaped city dust, there is one which constitutes a grievance peculiar to photographers alone. It is the injury which the flying particles, sitting into the room through every aperture, cause to the delicate films and sensitive plates. All films are made of preparations of gelatin, and a large proportion of the glass plates now used are also coated with this substance, which, because of its soft, sticky nature, is particularly likely to attract every atom of dust in the surrounding air. The particles, however small, leave their impress in the form of opaque spots upon the sensitive surface and seriously mar its perfection. To remove the damage a great amount of retouching is necessary, which is not only laborious and tiresome, but which cannot always be satisfactorily accomplished if the dust is very thick. What is known as the "carbon process" in photography is probably more easily injured by dust than any other, because an extremely delicate film of gelatin is used. Chiefly on account of this drawback the carbon process is seldom employed in this country, although photographs are made which resemble the real carbon pictures so closely in color that they are "carbon types." In England, where the carbon process is more common, it has become customary for London photographers to send their developing work out of town to be done, in order to escape the dust and smoke of the city, but this practice has not gained much ground here.

The photographers in this city, as a rule, perform their operations in the same building in which their studios are situated, and for the sake of this keeping the developing process at home, they are obliged to be at great trouble in protecting it. Some of the methods employed for this purpose were mentioned to a Tribune reporter the other day by a well-known Broadway artist.

"In the first place," he said, "we not only keep our dark room itself, but the whole top floor in which it is situated, spotlessly clean. The floors are all oiled until there is not a crack in their surface to harbor dust, and they are thoroughly washed every morning before we begin our day's work. All the tables, trays, and everything we use are kept equally clean. The windows, instead of being in the side walls, where the wind would strike them and bear the dust in with it, are in the roof, and very little dust can come in that way. All the cracks in the doors or around the window frames are stopped up, and we keep the dark room tightly closed as much of the time as possible. With these precautions we manage to get along pretty well, but a certain quantity of dust seems bound to creep in, and it causes us a good many hours of extra work in retouching."

Practically the same struggle against dust is the experience of every photographer in the city. One remedy which has been tried occasionally with success consists in filling the room in which the plates are kept with steam for a few moments each morning. This usually suffices to lay the dust for the entire day.

Puny Children

Who would prescribe only tonics and bitters for a weak, puny child? Its muscles and nerves are so thoroughly exhausted that they cannot be whipped into activity. The child needs food; a blood-making, nerve-strengthening and muscle-building food.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-Liver Oil is all of this, and you still have a tonic in the hypophosphites of lime and soda to act with the food. For thin and delicate children there is no remedy superior to it in the world. It means growth, strength, plumpness and comfort to them. Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion.

A Delicate Compliment.

No more elegant compliment was ever paid to a preacher than that of King Louis XIV. of France to Jean Baptiste Masillon, bishop of Clermont. Said he: "I have heard many great preachers, and the effect they produced on me was that I felt thoroughly satisfied with them. Every time I heard you, I have been dissatisfied with myself."
