MARRIED BY PROXY.

No Less Than Three Queens Have Thus Acquired Their Titles.

One of the queerest features of court life in Europe is the marriage by proxy of royal personages. There are at the present moment no less than three royal ladies who have been thus wedded—the queen regent of Spain, the dowager queen of Portugal and the ex-queen of Naples.

Kings and reigning sovereigns are held to be too important personages to be married anywhere else than in their own dominions. On the other hand, it is held to be infra dignitate for a spinster princess of the blood, who is about to blossom forth into a full-fledged queen or empress, to travel abroad in quest of a consort.

In order to meet this difficulty the royal or imperial bridegroom delegates one of the principal nobles of the realm, who goes through the religious and civil portion of the wedding ceremony in the capital of the bride's country on behalf of his master, making the responses for him and tendering his hand, as well as the ring, at the prescribed points of the ceremony. He then accompanies her to his master's dominions, acting as her chief escort.

According to the ideas of the Roman Catholic church, a ceremony of this kind is sufficiently binding upon the bride and upon the royal bridegroom to render any further ceremony, ecclesiastical or civil, superfluous, and when any additional religious function takes place it usually assumes the form of a "Te Deum" and a solemn benediction, attended by both husband and wife immediately on the arrival of the latter in the capital of her adopted country.—San Francisco Argonaut.

William Goes Armed.

The German emperor invariably carries with him wherever he goes a small revolver. His majesty is a skillful shot, and the chasseur who accompanies him everywhere has received orders to inspect this weapon every morning to insure the fact of its being in working order.—Chicago Times-Herald.

HER TWO NARROW ESCAPES.

Had Never Been Away from Home But Was Nearly Drowned Twice.

They were telling stories of the different dangers they had undergone by rail, water and other methods of traveling, and the girl who had never been very far away from home decided that it was high time she asserted herself. So, after a short period of concentrated thought, she sat up straight in her chair with a satisfied smile and took advantage of a momentary pause in the conversation to put in her long-neglected oar.

"Well," she said, proudly, "I know what it feels like to almost die by drowning, anyway; I've been nearly drowned twice."

"When? Where? How did it happen? I thought you'd never been away from home," chorused all her listeners, in amazement, and the last speaker lost no time in plunging into her story.

"I never was away from home," she related, with great glee, "but I've been nearly drowned twice, just the same. The first time was two years ago, when a party of us went out to one of the South side beaches one evening, and I had a lovely time until nearly the last. I couldn't swim, you see, so I was pulling myself out by the guarding rope, and I had got quite out of my depth when one of the girls threw some water at me. We were all splashing each other merrily, you know, and nothing would have happened if I hadn't had my mouth open to scream just then. As it was, the water went down my throat and nearly choked me. I let go of the rope and sank, and as we were almost out of the range of the electric lights I nearly drowned before they realized what had happened. That was the first time I came near to death by water."

"Oh! And the other?" queried the girl with a tendency to scoff at other people's stories. "Was it as dramatic as that experience?"

"Quite, if not more so," replied the story teller, unmindful of the veiled sarcasm in the other's manner, "and it happened at that very same beach, too. I was hanging on the rope that time, too, and having a perfectly gorgeous time, when the rope suddenly sank down beneath the water, and I went with it. I had just sense enough, remembering the other experience, to hold onto it, though, and presently, just as I began to lose consciousness, the rope came up to the surface again, and I was saved at the very moment when a man on the shore was taking off his shoes to come to my assistance. He had seen it all, and, I tell you, girls, he was perfectly lovely, too; I've got his card yet."

"What made the rope sink? Oh, a fat woman was balancing herself across it, trying to swim, you know, and her weight depressed it awfully, of course. When she fell off up it came, and me with it, all right and safe. But it was an awful narrow escape, just the same. I'd have been dead in another minute, and as it was I felt sick for a month afterward. I was so scared. And I can just tell you this, girls, it's an awful thing to come so near to death by drowning."—Chicago Times-Herald.

THE MAKING OF DIAMONDS.

What the Product of the Laboratory Looks Like.

At the Royal institution recently, Mr. William Crookes delivered a lecture on "Diamonds." He said that, thanks to Prof. Moissan, diamonds could now be manufactured in the laboratory—minutely microscopic, it was true, but with crystalline form and appearance, color, hardness and action on light the same as the natural gem. The first necessity was to select pure iron and to pack it in a carbon crucible with pure charcoal from sugar. Half a pound of this iron was put into the body of the electric furnace, and a powerful arc, absorbing about 100 horse power, formed close above it between carbon poles. The iron rapidly melted and saturated itself with carbon. After a few minutes' heating to a temperature above 4,000 degrees Centigrade, the current was stopped and the dazzling, fiery crucible plunged in cold water until it cooled below a red heat. Iron increased in volume at the moment of passing from the liquid to the solid state; hence the expansion of the inner liquid on solidifying produced an enormous pressure, under stress of which the dissolved carbon separated out in a transparent, dense, crystalline form—in fact, as diamond. To obtain the diamond from the metallic ingot required a long and tedious process of treatment with various strong reagents, and the specimens thus obtained were only microscopic. The largest artificial diamond yet made was less than one millimeter across. Many circumstances pointed to the conclusion that the diamond of the chemist and the diamond of the mine were strangely akin in origin, and the diamond genesis must have taken place at great depths under high pressure. How the great diamond pipes came into existence was not difficult to understand. After they were pierced they were filled from below, and the diamonds, formed at some epoch too remote to imagine, were thrown out with a mud volcano, together with all kinds of debris eroded from adjacent rocks. According to another theory the diamond was a direct gift from heaven, conveyed to earth in meteoric showers, and the so-called volcanic pipes simply holes bored in the earth by the impact of monstrous meteors.—London Times.
