New Rules of the Road for Ships Under Way.

The new rules of the road at sea have just gone into effect among the leading countries of the world, and there is little doubt that their strict enforcement will greatly enhance the safety of the mariner and the charges placed within his keeping.

When the question of means of communication was being considered, the more important question of a universal rule of navigation was neglected, and it was not until 1889 that the Washington marine conference was held.

The new rules are strict in their provisions, and will be rigidly enforced. The regulations regarding the carrying of lights on vessels at night are very concise, and no excuses that they were being trimmed, that the night was moonlight, that it was only a short time after sunset, will be taken.

Signals for fog are the subject of a lengthy article in the new rules, and they differ considerably from the old rules. Two additional rules are introduced, arranging for two prolonged blasts to be given by steam vessels under way but not moving through the water.

The steering rules for sailing vessels, the overtaking rule and the rule for sound signals for vessels in sight of one another are very complete and do not show wide or strongly-pronounced divergence from the old rules.
