Anthony Hope Hawkins.

Anthony Hope Hawking, the author of "The Prisoner of Zends," proves, on the closer acquaintance which his visit to this country is now yielding, no less attractive as a man than as a writer. His public readings from his own works seem to give his large audiences the highest satisfaction; and in the busy course of friendly dining through which he has been put since he landed he has shown himself to be the kindliest and most unassuming of guests of honor.

Mr. Hawkins is now thirty-four years old. He began life as a lawyer, and in 1892 he made a vigorous but unsuccessful canvass for a liberal seat in Parliament. While waiting for clients he began to write stories. He made his way but slowly at first; he had been writing four or five years before he achieved a save himself from following them. pronounced success in "The Prisoner of Zenda." "The Dolly Dialogues" followed and confirmed his popularity. It is an interesting fact that while he is visiting in this country an American magazine will begin publication of a sequel to the story which was his great success. McClure's Magazine for Desuccess. McClure's Magazine for De-out the slightest tremor of emotion in camber will contain the opening chap-his voice. "You," he remarked. They were extremely engaging people as they presented themselves in "The Prisoner of Zenda," but those who have had the privilege of reading the new story say that they are still more engaging in it, and that the series of adventures through which it carries them is one to keep readers sitting up all night. The story has been illustrated for McClure's by the author's personal friend, Charles Dana Gibson.

HE DROPPED HIS PIPE.

And the Loss Naturally Caused Him

One afternoon last summer I was standing on the great suspension bridge just below Niagara fulls look-ing at the great cataract and admiring the wonderful colors of the green and blue river 200 feet below. Several work-men were engaged in painting the bridge, and I became interested in their operations. It required no little engineering skill to rig up an apparatus by which to enable a painter to traverse the giant guy rope cables which radiate from the center of the bridge, fanshape, toward either end of the structure. A painter's platform four feet square was suspended from one of these cables by a trolley arrangement, a grooved wheel running on the cable, By means of a rope attached to this wheel a man on the bridge could draw the platform from the river bank-the terminus of the cable-to the bridge above, and as the platform passed along the cable a workman sitting on a common chair on the platform would paint the great iron rope above his head and behind the trolley wheel.

I was especially interested in the work of a Swede, who, perched on a small platform, was painting one of the Canadian braces. He had begun at the end of the cable on the Canadian shore far below, and had been pulled up the cable's steep incline toward the bridge until perhaps two-thirds of his fourney had been completed. There was absolutely nothing but air between him and the seething river 200 feet below; but there he sat, on a swinging platform, methodically plying his brush and complacently smoking a short clay pipe.

How it happened I don't know. But the man on the bridge suddenly let the rope slip out of his hands. There was a sharp cry of alarm from the startled painter as the platform began to spin down the incline, with constantly increasing momentum. It seemed as if the poor fellow must inevitably be dashed against the rocky precipice and tumble into the river a mangled corpse. The slack of the rope on the bridge, however, became entangled around a brace and the perilous descent came to a sudden end. The flying platform stopped with a jerk. The chair, a pail of paint, a brush and a clay pipe went sailing into space. The painter caught a corner of the platform just in time to

Two minutes later the platform had been pulled up to the bridge, and the Swede was given a chance to stretch his legs again in safety. The man on the bridge had not a word to say. He was as pale as a corpse and trembled like a leaf. But the Swede did have something to say, and he said it withtank you skal laind me your pipe.
