SKINNING RATTLERS ALIVE.

The Process Necessary to Take Off the Skin in the Best Condition.

Reuben Etters, game warden for the Sprace Run Rod and Gun club, of Bellefonte, Pa., lately told of experiences he has had with rattlesnakes. Speaking of snakes in general, he said:

"I fear copperheads because they do not give warning and can strike without being coiled, an act not possible with any other specimen of the reptile family. Copper snakes are invariably found along the water and never make an effort to escape, no matter how good an opportunity they may have. They prefer giving battle to anything that may cross their path.

"Rattlesnakes, as a rule, are found along the rocks away from the water, and they never strike before giving warning unless surprised; neither can they strike unless they are in coil. Oh, yes; I kill many rattlers every summer. Last summer I slaughtered something more than 200 big fellows, and I skinned every one of them alive. I nlways skin a rattler alive, because in killing them first you can hardly avoid spoiling the hides, and rattlesnake skins are becoming quite valuable of late. The process I adopt is this: I place a forked stick over the reptile's head and hold it to the ground. Then, placing the stick under the pit of my arm, I catch the snake by the tail with one hand and with my pocketknife in the other hand I rip it open on the Then belly from the tail to the head. loosening the skin from the body at the tail I place my foot on the stub and yank the hide off in much the same as you would skin an eel. I WBY tackled a big one last summer, and before I could get control of its tail the reptile succeeded in coiling itself around my arm a third time, and came near getting its head out from under the forked stick: but I finally stretched it and secured the skin without a blemish."-N. Probable Result of a Huropsan Uprising. Attitude of the Different Sations Toward Each Other -- The Effect It Would Have on America.

If the alliance of the three emperors, of Austria, Russia and Germany, holds out, what can the rest of Europe do? The Balkan and other eastern and southeastern provinces have been led into the combination, giving three emperors, it estimated, a fighting force of little short of 12,000,000 men. It seems to be a combination of eastern Europe against western Europe and western Europe has the weakest end of the continent. France, Italy and England together have a fighting strength of hardly 8,000,-000 men and France has not been on the best of terms, historically at least, with either Italy or England. The disposi-tion of Spain and Portugal and Holland and Belgium and Norway and Sweden and Denmark in event of an outbreak of a general European war would be problematical. They would try to remain neutral, probably, if that should be possible. Spain has enough to do to put down the insurrections in her colonies. Norway and Sweden are practically isolated from the rest of Europe and could profit by their situation and loca-Holland and Belgium would be tion. right between the contending powers in northern Europe. The natural affiliations of those two little but populous countries would be with western Eu-rope. Belgium is half French and Holland has no love for Germany, for Germany is generally suspected of having designs on that country. At home England might have trouble with Ireland, the Irish leaders would demand large concessions or give the rulmand large concessions or give the rul-ing island a great deal of trouble. On $125. the sea, France, Italy and England combined have two-thirds of the naval strength of Europe and could sweep everything before them, but the great war would not be fought on water, but on land and that land in the vicinity of the Mediterranean. In the division of the spolls, for it would be a war of spoliation, Russia and Germany and Austria would belp themselves and the rest would get nothing. Such might be the course of a general European war, which, according to many statesmen versed in foreign affairs, now seems probable. It would be the most destructive war the world has ever seen. France and Germany could not fight on the same side and Germany and England could get along no better together, for the anti-German feeling in England has become acute. Germany and France have contended and may contend again for territory, but Germany and England may in the future contend for the commerce of the world. Such at least are the hopes and ambitions of the Germans, who have already gone everywhere with their been the cause of it, would be lost sight

What effect would a European war have on America? At first the effect would be increased prices for all American products and manufactures. Europe would eat everything that this continent could raise. Millions of men would be taken from the producers and added to the consumers. Prices in this country would go up with a bound and in Toledo, Obio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. stay up. This is no doubt alluring to Testimonials free. Price 75c. per bottle. some Americans. But in the end would it be a blessing to this country? We think not. The increased prices would be a benefit to some, but a hardship to others. We have consumers as well as producers, in this country, and if the former receives more for what he has to sell, he would also pay more for what he has to buy. And after the great war was over would come a period of depression, sooner or later, the steady consumption of American products would be interfered with, because of the disturbed industries and conditions. It is now generally recognized that action and reaction are equal. America's position in event of a great European war would be that of strict neutrality. It would be a struggle in which we could take no sides, and in which our affections would be derance of sympathy would be with the nations of western Europe, both be-cause they are nearer to us geographic-ally and nearer to us by race and blood. There would be plenty of work for the American navy, however, to protect our ports from marauders, and to protect the rights of Americans and to protect the rights of Americans abroad .- Iowa State Register.

The Greater United States.

The distance across the United States Is found to be 2,625.2 geographical miles from the lighthouse six miles north of Cape May, N. J., to the lighthouse six miles south of Punta Arenas, following the thirty-ninth of latitude as closely parallel possible. This is conceded to be about the mean breadth of the country. A glance at the map will show that the United States is much wider toward the north and much narrower toward the gulf coast, but the thirty-ninth parallel is about as fair an average as can be drawn. The measurements were made by triangulationthat is, by taking observations from fixed landmarks and verifying them by astronomical tests. The distance across the continent thus obtained is 140 feet longer than that reported by Bessels in 1856, and 98 feet longer than that reported by Prof. Clark in 1896 .--Chicago Record. See.
