NEWS NOTES.

Quincy was re-elected mayor of Boston yesterday.
 Yesterday a robber was killed while trying to rob a station near Redding, Cal.
 The first meeting of the National Building Trades Council was held at St. Louis Monday.
 Latest advices say that England is thinking very seriously of helping herself to a slice of China.
 Reports received from Portland this morning state that the Portland Chamber of Commerce may send a relief expedition to Alaska.
 No appointments will be made by the president during the recess of congress except in case of emergency. Despite the announcement of this fact, the number of visitors at the White House yesterday was unusually large.
 Yesterday Miss Leila Herbert, daughter of the ex-secretary of war, died at her home in Whington. The death was reported to police headquarters as a case of suicide caused by melancholia and temporary aberration of the mind as the result of illness.

After a week of conference in Boston, Justices Putnam and King, the commissioners for the United States and Canada, respectively, in the arbitration of the Behring sea claims, have completed their work for the present, and it is understood will soon begin the preparation of their reports to their respective governments.

WHEN MR. LEWIS ENTERS.

Two Doors Admit the Visitor, and the Senate Chamber Is Impressed.
 The character of the present congress is J. Hamilton Lewis. He is a character not to be comprehended all at once. He grows upon you. It takes some time to realize how strange he is. His extravagance of dress and his attitude first attract attention. When he enters the house, no matter what is doing, every eye instinctively turns toward him, like the eyes of the audience in a theater turn to the leading man when he breaks through the throng of minor actors.
 Mr. Lewis visits the senate frequently. There is nothing more dramatic than his entrance into the presence of that august body. He never by any chance enters through one of the side doors. The senate may be engaged in a heated debate or deeply absorbed in a bewildering schedule of the tariff bill. Suddenly a sense of something happening comes upon everyone. People in the galleries look down and the interest of the senate is arrested. Both the swinging doors of the main entrance at the head of the center aisle, facing the vice president, swing open and Mr. Lewis appears. The doors close behind him and he stands for a moment under the archway, his hat and gloves in one hand in front of him, and looks toward the vice president with a slight inclination of the head, as much as to say: Do not let me interrupt you. Then he looks with a sweeping glance to the right and to the left, slightly inclining his body. He then straightens himself up and sweeps the galleries with a glance. By this time every eye is upon him, and, with the graceful, dainty steps of a dancing master, he walks over to the democratic side of the chamber, greeting in the most graceful manner imaginable each senator who happens to be in his path to the vacant seat he is making for. His manner of greeting is to shift his hat and gloves from his right hand to his left with a flourish, taking two steps forward, as if about to extend his right hand, at the same time inclining his body gracefully and giving his hat a great sweep by his side, as the ideal cavalier trails his plume to the ground in bowing to "my lady." It would be impossible for him to enter into any presence without attracting attention, and apparently he has no intention of trying to do so.

 With his fluffy hair and whiskers, both parted in the middle, he looks like some of the portraits of Capt. John Smith of about the time when he is supposed to have excited the imagination of the impressionable Indian maiden. Instead of the glittering trappings of a knight, his dress is a display of the highest skill of the tailor, setting off his slender form in all its graceful lines and clinging to him with an affectionate softness. His every movement ends in a posture, and, with a gentle undulation, he passes from one posture to another. His voice is music and his words flow like poetry being recited off 220 words to the minute.—Philadelphia Telegram.

THE LIGHT OF THE FUTURE.

Studying That Produced by Animal and Vegetable Life.
 The incandescent electric light wastes and throws away 93 per cent. of the energy utilized, only two per cent. appearing in the shape of light rays. On the other hand, the light emitted by the firefly and the glow worm wastes but two per cent. In other words, the animal light is 48 times cheaper.
 In the course of recent experiments Dr. Raphael Dubois, of Lyons, has made elaborate studies of a great many kinds of light-producing creatures. There is no lack of them in nature; in fact, thousands of species possess this curious photogenic power. Not a few plants also have it, and among the latter may be mentioned certain mushrooms that grow in Brazil and Austria. Some of them give enough light to make it possible to read by the aid of a single specimen. The luminosity frequently seen in autumn in the forests on dead leaves or on bits of wood is due to fungi. The yellow flowers of the nasturtium emit a small amount of light. But in the animal kingdom the torchbearers assume an immense variety of forms, the minute organisms that are responsible for much of the ocean's phosphorescence of their own and form endless torch-light processions through the other-worldly black and gloomy marine abysses.
 Many jelly fishes are luminous, and so are some of the star fishes. A few earthworms are light-givers and numerous crustaceans have a luminosity of their own. One kind of shrimp has a brilliant circle surrounding the eye, which is really a luminous socket. A European species of "thousand legs" emits light in autumn. But no animals are better light-givers than certain insects, and even the eggs of some of these are luminous. From generation to generation the light-bearing creatures transmit the torch that is never extinguished, and which seems to have been lighted at the very dawn of creation.—Boston Transcript.
