NEWS NOTES

The Elder arrived from Alaska last night, bringing with her very little gold dust or news.

A report received this morning states that the Seminole Indians are on the warpath in the Indian territory. It stated further that they have already killed twenty-five people.

The president of the Montana State Bank was killed yesterday by a crank who was out of work. The only reason for the crime, as far as could be learned, was that the bank president refused him employment.

Senator Carter, of the Senate committee on territories, and Chairman Cox of the house committee, had a conference yesterday, going over what legislation is necessary for Alaska. It was agreed that nothing should yet be done in the way of giving Alaska a territorial form of government, in view of the different character of the population of that district. It was decided that action should be taken giving more United States commissioners for the district.

DINNER-GIVING ETIQUETTE.

Points to Be Observed by Both Guests and Guests.

The dinner is the most important of social ceremonies. It is a function, an observance, a solemnity, the most flattering form of entertainment that can be offered to a guest and as such it should be duly respected and appreciated. The art of giving dinners that are at once dignified, delightful and distinguished, is a rare one, yet it is possible to achieve with a mere expenditure of time and pains so well laid out that it is a marvel that even dinnerware, the exception and not the rule among us. As a rule, the dinner is regarded as an affair of ceremony, and people who do not give dinners themselves are not seldom asked to dine, except in the case of very girls or bachelors, indeed likely to stop a gap. Dinner-giving is often the most costly form of hospitality when it is largely indulged in, and people who cannot give dinners as they should be given but much better not suppose them at all, but continue their efforts to less formal entertainments of luncheons, luncheons, breakfasts and ordinary "tea times." The dinner is but a social function in which the host always plays a part as the hostess. The name appears with hers on the invitations, and the expenses are divided in the same ratio as between the two. But though modern custom has reduced the cost of much of the ancient glory in the way of serving heavy dishes and passing wine, he still has the honor of the foot of the table with all the dignity which thus position entails.

The length of a dinner invitation varies with the size and importance of the dinner. For a large and sumptuous one two weeks' notice is required, and this notice is sometimes extended so double that time. For small and informal dinners, five or six days notice is sufficient. Printed cards may be used, on which details are left to the names of the hosts, guests and guests' data, address and hour. These cards are, as a rule, only used when the dinner is one of ceremony. Invitations to small dinners are generally written, and vary in friendliness with the informality of the entertainment. They are written in the third person, it is a friendly and companionable card. In my case, whether the invitation be friendly or formal, it should be answered within 12 hours after it has been received. Dinner-giving is unlike any other species of entertainment in that it is all-important to have a certain number of guests to count upon and to select them with discretion. It is necessary to allow a hostess ample time to invite other guests to fill the places of my who may disappoint her. An invitation to dinner, it has been said, is issued in the joint names of host and hostess, though, of course, the hostess writes the note, if a note occurs in the answer must be addressed to her, though the host's name is mentioned in accepting or rejecting. The invitation may be sent and answered either by post or by the hand of a servant.

Some people are perpetually invited out to dine, not because they give many dinners in return, but because they are recognized as good dinner-givers. They are generally provided with plenty of light small talk and the gossip of the day, are pleasant, popular and gifted with that tact which is one of the marks of an excellent dinner-giver. As it is one of the most valuable of possessions. There are others who must be used as a duty, on account of the dinners they themselves give, and who are the children and of a brother so often as she has to include their names among the list of her guests. She knows very well that their mere presence will call for a charity effort to keep the whole dinner from being "a feast," and that they will probably outweigh all her efforts.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

General Debility and Loss of Flesh

Scott's Emulsion has been the standard remedy for nearly a quarter of a century. Physicians readily admit that they obtain results from it that they cannot get from any other flesh-forming food.

There are many other preparations on the market that pretend to do what does, but they fail to perform it. The pure Norwegian Cod-liver Oil made into a delightful cream, skillfully blended with the Hypochlorites of Lime and Soda, which are such valuable tonics, makes this preparation an ideal one and checks the wasting tendency, and the patient almost immediately commences to put on flesh and gain a strength which surprises them.

Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion. See that the man and fish are on the wrapper.
