THE ARMY RATION.

Experiments to Produce a Concentrated Food.

Nothing Found to Take the Place of the Old-Fashioned Ration of Bacon and Hardtack in Suitaable Bulk.

The recent experiments of the United States government to test the value of a concentrated army ration have quite naturally proved a failure They were instituted by the secretary of war with a view to reducing the bulk and weight of food without impairing its nutritive tated by the fact that the American army is more in need of possible improvements in this line, in view of the heavy, tedious and long transportation of supplies across the plains and through districts that are incapable of affording the proper amount and quality of food in times of emergencies.

The German army, for example, when moving in small bodies always purchases supplies on the march as wanted. The same is true of the French. Russian, Austrian and other European armies, but at the same time the soidiera usualiy have in their knapsacks what is called an "emergency" ration, generally sausage or preserved meat of some kind The soldiers of the Japanese army in the late war with China carried an emergency ration of rice in a little tin case strapped to the top of their knapsacks.

The reports made by the different military departments to which the questions were referred are interesting as bearing upon the value of food protiucts generally and on the physiological questions involved in the digestive and nutritive processes more particularly. Theoretically speaking, it would appear that the problem had been solved regarding the amount of food necessary to sustain life and the varieties of sustenance that gave in minimum compass the greatest amount of nourishment.

All the observers agree, however, that the old-lashioned ration of bacon and hard-tack in suitable bulk is the most practical that has ever been suggested. The quantity of food necessary to keep a soldier in good condition is fixed at 22 ounces. The latter amount is increased for obvious reasons to 26 ounces.

When the theories were put to a practical test the result was as might have been anticipated. Various concentrated food tablets were employed in Colorado, but more than half the men who were victims to the experiment became candidates for hospital treatment. The following extract from the report speaks very significantly on some very essential and striking facts: "A company of the Seventh infantry, at Fort Logan, near Denver, was detailed and furnished with condensed rations, consisting of coffee, soup, bread and bacen. The coffee and soup were in small tablets, which, when placed in boiling water, were ready for consumption in two minutes. The bread was in small, flat cakes, the weight and hardness of a brick, but when moistened swelled out like a sponge. The bacon was compressed and only needed to be warmed in a fry- hereafter be required of men seeking ing-pan. The soldiers started out with enlistment in the United States army. ten days' rations, but the campaign was brought to an abrupt end after four days of 15-mile marches. The food not only did not satisfy the hunger er give strength, but seemed to irritate the stomach. After the first meal, two of the enlisted men had to be placed under the surgeon's care. At the end of the second day 30 of the 70 men in the company were ill, and on the fourth day the whole command went into camp, and couriers were sent to town for hard-tack and ordinary coffee and bacon. Some of the soldiers were seriously ill with a stomach complaint, and were confined to the hospital for several days." All this goes to show that not only placing them on a dog. very much is to be learned regarding laboratory feeding, but that we are also far from the proper appreciation of nature's complex requirements in food taking. Thus far the human laboratory, with its multiple, interdependent, and complementary methods, has a monopoly of its own in fixing the proper standards for digestion, assimlation and subsequent growth. There is a natural law pervading the whole that must not be violated by too radical attempts at modification or improve-

SWELL PEOPLE'S SERVANTS. They Are Far More Patronising Than Their Masters.

"I wonder if I'm more of a snob than most people," remarked little Mrs. Candour, confidentially, to the New York Tribune man, "for I must plead guilty to being dreadfully afraid of smart servants! The only set of individuals before whom I actually quail are the ladies' ladies and the gentlemen's gentlemen. With their masters or mistresses I can hold my own fairly well; their wealth and grandeur do not overawe me a bit. But the servants distinctly depress and in a way humilate me, for I feel so vexed with myself that I have so little self-respect as to mind them. Nevertheless, I do, and I fancy a good many other people do, too, if they have the frankness to acknowledge it. The other evening, for in-stance, we were dining at the Midases' and I began to feel uncomfortable as Family work at reduced rates. Wash collected and delivered free. "'Wait until we are inside of the house,' I said to the driver, feeling guiltily conscious that I wanted the footman to see that we did not arrive in the 'bus.'

"'Why?' inquired my husband, innocently (men are so stupid, they never suffer from these aristocrats of the kitchen). "'Oh,' I answered, feebly, 'perhaps him to; I don't mind,' said poor Jack, bewildered.

"Inside the door was another footman and Mrs. M.'s own maid, who looked critically at my home-made gown and shook out my skirts with proud humility. You know the Midas house and how the room in which they receive their dinner guests is beyond the big drawing-room; so, although I was longing to ask Jack if my hair was all right and receive the comforting assurance, which he always gives, dear fellow, that I looked 'awfully fit,' I felt rather than saw that the butler was waiting petiently and reproachfully to usher us through the antercom and announce us. 'Come,' I said to myself as my glove wouldn't go on and I felt that the battery of observant, calmly critical eyes was more than I could endure, 'do remember, you snobbish little thing, that you are as good as Mrs. Midas' butler, anyway,' and, rallying my self-respect, I deliberately finished buttoning my glove and swept haughtily through the

"'By Jove, Tessie,' said Jack afterward, 'you looked like a regular little queen of Shebs. What made you so grand?

"'It was the instinct of self-preservation,' I answered. 'I simply had to assert myself to keep from feeling ut-
