CAUGHT BY A KODAK.

How It Put the Family in a Queer Plight Before the Minister.

Miss Macgillieudie's new kodak came home from down-town late Saturday night. If there had been light enough she would have done a lot of snapp-shooting before she went to bed, but as kodaks don't work after dark she was obliged to wait till morning.

As soon as breakfast was over she picked up her new toy and made pictures of the dog and the cat until her mother protested so vigorously against such employment on Sunday morning that she had to desist. When the old folks had gone to church, however, Miss Macgillieudie remained at home because of a slight indisposition, the kodak was trotted out again. The young lady had tried, though, of photographing such commonplace subjects as the dog and the cat, so she sent to the house of a couple of friends and asked them to come over and pose for her. They came and were photographed in numerous poses, but the young artist wanted something lively and characteristic.

"You girls are always playing cards," she said, "why shouldn't I photograph you in the midst of a game. You'll have to sit still only three or four minutes, and you can easily do that."

The other girls acquiesced, and the cards and a set of poker chips were spread out on a lapboard between them. After the necessary posing and squinting to get everything in proper focus, the cap was removed from the kodak.

Unfortunately Miss Macgillieudie had taken no account of time during her morning's experiments, and the expose was not more than a minute old when the front door opened and in walked her father and mother, accompanied by the new minister, whom they had brought to Sunday dinner. The first thing they saw, of course, on entering the house, was the poker game between the two young women, and the minister, discreetly looking away as soon as possible, failed to discover the kodak. Mrs. Macgillieudie was embarrassed beyond expression by the sight and hurried away to her room, where she shed bitter tears. Mr. Macgillieudie, however, tried to make explanation, but only succeeded in making matters worse.

"Not really a card game, I assure you, Mr. Fourthly," he stammered in an embarrassed fashion. "Girls only practicing with their new kodak."

The rattling of the cards and chips as the girls tried to scramble them out of sight, seemed to disprove this statement, however, and Mr. Fourthly put an end to it by saying, coldly:

"Least said about that is surest mended. Jam sure, Mr. Macgillieudie." He left the house as soon after dinner as he decently could without anyone having the courage to make good the explanation.—Chicago Times-Herald.

A TOOTH OF GOLD.

The Truthful Narration of a Dentist Who Knew His Business.

The man in the chair of torture was remonstrating with the doctor of dental surgery.

"That's all right," said the dentist, "but you are foolish not to let me build that tooth up with gold for you."

"What's the use? It will cost me $40, you say, and I cannot afford to eat my five-dollar-a-week board bill with a $40 tooth. It is too much dead capital."

"Is it?" smiled the dentist. "Listen to a story. About ten years ago I was trying to make a living in the west in partnership with a fellow who wasn't any luckier than I was. We worked around to the north where the winters are as bad as they are in the Klondike, and our funds kept getting lower and lower until starvation sat down to table with us. The weather was getting colder, too, and the last wagon train out was booked for the following Sunday, then two days away. It was our last chance, for to remain there for the four months till the trail was open meant death sure. The price to go with the train was $25 each. Just what $25 amounts to you will never know until you need it as badly as we did.

"We hadn't a cent on earth and nothing to put up to get one with. It was indeed a cold day for both of us. By Saturday noon we had given up all hope of getting out, and we had retired to our shanty to drown our sorrow in a quart of whisky we had discovered, no matter how. As we sat gazing in stupid despair at each other with the full bottle between us, my partner grinned a ghastly grin and the gleam of the gold in his filled teeth caught my eye. I concealed my feelings quietly and asked him how many teeth he had filled. He told me there were six, and one of them was nearly a solid gold tooth and had cost him $50. In a minute I had communicated my ideas to him, and in another minute I had my tools, for I had been studying dentistry then, at work in his mouth, digging away like a miner. It was a rich find, and in half an hour I had out every bit of gold in those teeth of his and had beaten it up into a vial that we took to the owner of a saloon who knew what raw gold was worth. He looked it over and offered $60 for the vial."

"My partner kept his mouth shut and so did I, and when the train moved out with its wagons next day we had our place in the front row and five dollars apiece spending money. Six months later we struck luck and I filled my partner's teeth and never charged him a cent."

"Go on with mine," said the man in the chair, "and charge me the same." —Washington Star.

WILLIAM'S GREAT STABLE.

Three Hundred and Forty Horses, Eleven for the Empress.

The "marshall," or stable of the German emperor, consists of 340 saddle and carriage horses all from five to ten years old. Eleven of the finest of these are reserved especially for the use of the empress. Six of them are brown trakehnes and are for carriage use, and the others are broken to saddle.

The horses are entered in the stables when they are five years old and are trained a half year before they are used. The requirements are hard. They must be showy and fiery, be perfect in action and still be as gentle as lambs. They must be broken to the harness and traffic of city streets, to troops and to hot infantry and artillery fire, and must be taught, in addition, to remain perfectly unmoved when there is loud shouting from the great crowd all around them.

The empress was a poor horsewoman when she was married, but since then she has ridden almost daily. She has a special stablemaster who rides with her. He is a beautiful creature in a red coat embroidered with gold, white riding breeches and high black boots. For ordinary occasions, such as the daily pleasure drives of the empress, she has a coachman, two outriders and one mounted man ahead. For festive occasions, even though she be alone in the carriage, six great black trakehnes draw her carriage. The leaders are ridden by men in handsome liveries.

In parades she rides a great gelding and wears a dress modeled after the cuirassier uniform, with a big white feather-covered hat. Her hunter is a brown horse.

BURROS FOR JAPAN.

A Big Ranch of Them to Be Shipped from Oregon Ranges.

Not long ago, when W. L. Powell and A. J. Powell were riding through Wallowa county to buy horses they noticed on the range numerous herds of burros. They hunted up the owner, a hotel man at Elgin, says the Portland Oregonian: "What do you want for these burros?" asked one of the Powells.

The owner fixed no price, but would sell.

"I'll give you $3.50 a head and round them up myself or six dollars a head, you to deliver them at the corral."

A contract was made on the latter basis for 600 head. The owner found the job of collecting these burros a big one. They were wild and free and objected to captivity. Since August last from six to ten men have been busy with lariats, and they have just finished the work. When a bunch of six or seven were captured their heads were tied together and they were released until wanted. Nearly 1,000 head, many of them young jacks, were at last rounded up and delivered. The Powells took them all. They will be shipped to Seattle, and the majority are destined for Japan to be used there as pack animals. Some go to the Klondike, however. The younger ones will be released by the Powells on the ranges near Prosser, Wash., to further increase and multiply.

A dozen years or so ago the pack train of an emigrant outfit, consisting of burros, was turned loose in Wallowa valley. From these ancestors sprang the 1,000 head that now comprise the novel shipment of the Powells.
