ERROR IN A MONEY ORDER.

Process by Which the Post Office Cor-

roots a V. rong Address. Here is a good tip on post office matters: The other day a young fellow got a postal order and gave the name of the payee wrong. The order the uld have been made out to John Parcele (that's not his name) in Washington, but by mistake his address was put down as Enlittere. It was a case of heterophemy or some hing of that kind, says a Washington paper.

There the employer went to the proper window, and, having receipted for the amount of the money order. he was sent to the cashier. It was as If he'd been to window A, and then wan sent to window C. At C he presented his receipted money order, adorned with certain stamps and marks, and there he received the amount called for by the order. Then, having made out another and correct application, be joined the line at window P, got his rougher, and for the second time went to the eashier at window C, where he paid for and got his money order in correct chare.

So the mistake cost him three cents, the expense of the first wrong money order. He paid for one order, and got the amount of the order back, though not the charge for the order; then he had to pay for another order. That was all, and he had the experience. Perhaps he's still in debt to Uncle Sam
